It can, of course, be eaten when fresh, but is usually used for the familiar "jujubes" combined with cane sugar or honey.

Another emigrant from the far east among trees is the Tung oil tree, from which drying oils are now secured for the paint manufacturers. It was, it may be added, the war which inadvertently brought about a demand for a new drying oil that led to the bringing to this country of young Tung oil trees from China. So far they seem to be flourishing, but they will not be counted as American trees for some time yet.

Not a Question of Height.

When Lawrence Orr. of the state board of accounts, was serving as a paid examiner he went to Jackson county to check up the records in the various departments of the courthouse. He was acquainted with most of the county officials, but since his last visit Simeon L. Henderson had become recorder. Mr. Henderson is an unusually large man, standing more than six feet.

When Mr. Orr was introduced to Mr. Henderson he glanced up at his towering height and remarked:

"Goodness, Mr. Henderson, you are a tall man. How tall are you, anyway?"

To which Mr. Henderson replied: "In this particular case, Mr. Orr, it is not a question of how tall I am, but how short I am."

Mr. Henderson's books checked up to the penny .- Indianapolis News.

Chicago First Negro City.

Chicago is the first negro city in America. Estimates by negro leaders set the negro population of Chicago at 125,000. Two years ago the number was 25,000. Demand for labor, high wages and the awakening of the negro through travels induced by the war are given as causes for the tremendous influx. Negro labor is employed largely by the packing houses. It is organized and affiliated with labor federations. Negroes have crowded the whites out of some territory, so that it is now impossible to define the "black belt." Negro living conditions have improved with growth. Over 800 negro business men have their own places. Thousands own their homes and old squalid quarters have been replaced by clean, well-lighted streets and neatly kept buildings.

No. Indeed.
