DRICE by itself is meaningless. It's what you get for the price that counts.

- The first test we give an article before it can find a place in our stock is, "Is it good?"
- If it measures up to our standard; if we feel it will give absolute satisfaction---then, but not till then, we purchase it.
- After that we mark it as reasonably as is consistent with good storekeeping.
- But if it's only claim for our attention is low price---we won't ave it
- Nothing is cheap that won't give service. We sell good merchandise for as little as we can.
