The contract calls for the installation of the organ in September, as it will take six months to build and get it in shape for installation.

—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Armagast, well known residents of Buffalo Run valley, had a very unpleasant experience at their home near Hunter's Park on Sunday night. Their sleeping room is warmed by a double heater from the room beneath and between two and three o'clock in the morning Mr. Armagast was awakened through a sense of suffocation and discovered the room filled with coal gas. He managed to get out of bed and across the room to a window which he opened as high as he could to allow fresh air to flow into the room. As soon as he had recovered a little he went to the bed to see if the gas had affected Mrs. Armagast and found her unconscious. In fact it was an hour or two before she regained consciousness, but it was several hours later before they had come around sufficiently to go down stairs. Had Mr. Armagast not wakened when he did the result might have been very tragic, as both these good people were well along the road towards asphyxiation.

—Constable George Glenn, who had been housed up ten days with a bad attack of quinsy, has entirely recovered and is able to be around on his numerous jobs, as usual. In addition to filling the office of constable Mr. Glenn acts as extra policeman in Bellefonte, conducts a chair and umbrella repair shop, tends a dozen or more furnaces, and switches the electric juice on the "Watchman's" typesetting machine while making his rounds in the early hour of the morning. And he has always been so dependable and faithful in the performance of every duty he has undertaken that we have all been prone to take him as a matter of course, and never fully realized what a blessing in disguise he is until he was taken sick almost two weeks ago. And that is the reason that the "Watchman" force along with a number of others are devoutly thankful he has recovered and hope he will stay well—at least, for the next twenty-five years at least.

Whiskey Stolen from Liquor Depository in Postoffice Cellar.

Early Wednesday morning the discovery was made that some person had broken into the old wine cellar in the Brockerhoff house, now used as a depository by the United States government for the storage of confiscated strong drinks, and had stolen therefrom a quantity of bottled whiskey, principally Overholt and Golden Wedding. When the discovery of the robbery was made it was further discovered that Charles W. Baney, who has been firing the boilers in the Brockerhoff building was among the missing; at least was not at his post of duty.

The state police were notified and two officers proceeded to the Pennsylvania railroad depot just in time to see Baney purchase two tickets for Lock Haven. With him was Thomas W. Johnson, a colored man, lugging a rather nifty looking suit case. But when Mr. Johnson saw the state police walking his way he promptly put down the suit case and made a hurried departure from the depot, but he was soon captured and in company with Baney and the suit case taken to the office of district attorney James C. Furst, who proceeded to put the gentlemen through the regular legal quiz.

In the meantime a state policeman was sent out to round up "Brownie" (Harry Brown, another colored man), who was also believed to be implicated at least to the extent of getting some of the liquor, and when found it was quite evident that he had not only gotten some whiskey somewhere but was accumulating it inside himself about as rapidly as possible. He was in what in ye olden days was considered, a glorious state of intoxication, and with him were secured the dregs of one quart bottle and two full bottles, all of which were confiscated.

When Baney and Johnson were taken to the district attorney's office the suit case was opened and found to contain seven or eight full quarts of whiskey, mostly Overholt. But when questioned Baney absolutely denied having stolen the liquor from the postoffice cellar. He maintained that he had purchased the liquor from an unknown individual in a truck on the state road out beyond the aviation field. He averred that he had paid six dollars a quart for it and admitted that he had sold either two or three bottles to Brownie for three dollars a quart and the balance he had stored in an old barn on east Linn street.

He further stated as Johnson was not working now he went to his house early on Wednesday morning and proposed that they take the whiskey to Lock Haven and sell it. Johnson agreed, and borrowing the suit case they went to the old barn, got the whiskey and had just bought the tickets for Lock Haven when taken into custody. Such was Baney's story, but whether true or not, he and Johnson and Brownie were all sent to jail, the suit case sealed and deposited in a locked cell in the jail and the federal authorities notified. If it turns out that the whiskey was stolen from the postoffice cellar, which is now a United States depository, there is no doubt but that it is a case for the federal court; and even if Baney's story is true that he bought the whiskey and was going to Lock Haven to dispose of it, he is at least guilty of bootlegging, which also comes under the jurisdiction of the U. S. court.

Federal officers were in Bellefonte yesterday checking up the liquor in the postoffice cellar, and so far as they could determine about two cases of bottled goods are missing, mostly Overholt, the balance Golden Wedding. Whoever took the stuff got it by prying two boards loose from the partition separating the wine cellar from the main part of the cellar under the Brockerhoff house, and notwithstanding Baney's denial of theft suspicion points pretty straight to him as the guilty party. Brownie was discharged from custody yesterday, as there is nothing to connect him with the theft of the whiskey.

—At their card party at the Elk's lodge on Tuesday evening the members of the Red Cross organization cleared between $80 and $90.

Keichline on Wednesday morning but the defendant in the case failed to appear and after hearing the story of Mr. Barnes and his witnesses the justice awarded him a judgment in the sum of $208.

Laymen's Banquet at Williamsport.

The annual laymen's banquet, one of the features of the winter meetings of the Williamsport archdiocese of the Episcopal church, was held in the Trinity parish house at Williamsport on Monday evening. Covers were laid for over 550, and the affair was warmed up by men from the city churches singing popular songs. Invocation was pronounced by the Right Rev. James Henry Darlington, D. D., Bishop of Harrisburg.

The guest of honor was the Right Rev. Thomas F. Gailor, D. D., presiding Bishop of the executive council of the American Episcopal church, who made an address on the subject, "The Church at Work." He was followed by Bishop Darlington, chairman of the joint commission to confer with the eastern Orthodox churches and the old Catholics, who spoke on the topic, "Our Relations with the Eastern Church." Major General Charles M. Clement, secretary of the diocese of Harrisburg, made an address, his subject being "Recruiting for the Sacred Ministry."

State Police Rescued Doe Fawn from Dogs.

Last Friday afternoon a doe fawn, probably nine or ten months old, was chased off of Bald Eagle mountain down to the old fair grounds by dogs and when the dogs were driven away the little animal was so nearly exhausted that it lay down and refused to move. The state police were notified and securing the services of a small truck went down to the fair grounds, secured the fawn and brought it to Bellefonte. They placed it in a box stall in the D. W. Geiss livery. The deer had been slightly bitten on the hind legs and about the head by the dogs, but was not in bad shape, aside from being run to the point of death. It will be kept penned up until it entirely recovers then will be given its liberty.

The fawn is probably one of a pair which, with their mother, have spent most of the winter on the point of the mountain above the old McCoy works, where they have been feeding pretty regularly on hay and other stuff stored in the old McCoy barn on the mountain. It is just possible that the deer ventured too close to civilization and were detected by the dogs that gave chase.

Pity the Poor Farmer.

On Friday last a gentleman handed the writer a suspicious package with only a word of explanation and then went on his way. He said: "A friend of yours asked me to hand you this and said you tell him that this is the kind of stuff the farmers have to live on now-a-days and since they are reduced to such fare I think he ought to stop knockin' 'em."

Shades of the days when Brit. Steele used to go harvesting in Pennsylvania. When he said the tables were piled so high with food that he couldn't see the hands sitting opposite him. Visions of the old farm carry-all and the three seated wagon faded away into flocks of Fords, Buicks, Dodges and Studebakers polluting the pure air of the farms with their nasty city smell. Then the little red hen that once cackled the claxon call that she was worth twenty-five cents flew by with a tag of a dollar and a half on her tail and we came too in a bewilderment of concern as to what had happened to "the poor farmer."

The parcel felt as though it might contain a piece of sausage, enough fitch to garnish the top of a pot of baked beans with or the brisquet of a toothless cow, but when we opened it there was the biggest, thickest, juiciest, broadest broad sirloin steak that has ever been lapped by a country newspaper man who sees fresh meat three times a week and such meat once in a life time.

And that was the kind of stuff that Abe Markle, of State College, says "the poor farmers have to live on now-a-days." Lord, it's no wonder they just sit around all winter. If we had steak like that all the time we couldn't even sit. We'd have to recline.

—J. Frank Lose, who has been tenant on the J. M. Weaver farm near Fiedler for some years past, bought the property last week. The farm contains fifty-three acres and the price paid was $8500.

Centre County Men Blamed for Lock Haven Robbery.

C. Frederic Schad, of Bellefonte, and Robert Bullock, of State College, were arrested in Lock Haven on Saturday night on a charge of burglarizing the home of Ira Nestlerode, and have been held without bail for a hearing this (Friday) afternoon. According to the story the above two young men with Robert Thompson and William O. Lambert drove to Lock Haven in Bullock's car. Along during the evening Schad and Bullock visited the Moose home and there met Nestlerode, who is treasurer of the Moose lodge. Later in the evening the three men took a drive in young Bullock's car and on the return trip stopped to leave Mr. Nestlerode out at his home. The latter gentleman invited Schad and Bullock in and while there as his guests he displayed to them a large roll of bills which he stated contained over fifteen hundred dollars, and also a number of Liberty bonds, all of which he averred was the property of the Moose.

The young men remained at the Nestlerode home perhaps a half hour then left. According to their story they then drove to the Studebaker garage where they purchased a crank wrench and later met two girls and went into a restaurant to get something to eat. While in there they heard that they were wanted at the police station and later were arrested for robbing the Nestlerode home of money, Liberty bonds and valuables to the amount of approximately three thousand dollars.

The story of the robbery, as told in the Lock Haven paper is that a son of Mr. Nestlerode just happened to be standing across the street from his home when he saw a fire in one of the upstairs rooms. He ran across, entered the house and running upstairs smothered the fire with his overcoat. He then discovered that his father's strong boxes had been broken open and rifled of their contents. He at once gave the alarm and the police were notified. Mr. Nestlerode promptly blamed the robbery on Schad and Bullock and swore out warrants for their arrest. Learning that Thompson had gone to Lock Haven with the two other men he subsequently swore out a warrant for his arrest, but after being detained until Monday he was discharged, as nothing was found to implicate him in any way.

A peculiar thing about the robbery is the fact that when the son discovered the fire and ran across the street he found the door locked and so far as known no evidence was found as to how the robbers, whoever they were, got into the house.

A fingerprint specialist from Williamsport, took photographs of various objects in the room of the Nestlerode home on Tuesday as a means of identification, but even should he find prints to correspond with those of Schad and Bullock it would not indicate their guilt, as both men had been in the room with Nestlerode early in the evening.

Schad and Bullock have retained the services of attorney Furst, of Lock Haven, and W. D. Zerby, of Bellefonte, to look after their interests at the hearing today, if they are held for that. Latest advices from Lock Haven are in effect that the authorities are working on another clue and it is possible something may develop that will clear the Centre county men of suspicion.

Lt. Col. Wilbur F. Leitzel Decorated With a Distinguished Service Cross.

The first soldier of the late war, or to be more exact, of any war, to have the honor of being decorated in Centre county by a representative of the War Department is Lt. Col. Wilbur F. Leitzel, who distinguished himself in France, while in command of the Boal Machine Gun Troop. The story of Col. Leitzel's brilliant service is known to all readers of the "Watchman."

On Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock the simple, though memorable ceremony was enacted on the plateau in front of the officer's club of the 28th Division U. S. A., at Boalsburg, the home of the old Boal troop and now the barracks of the Boal machine gun troop of the National Guard. The troop was formed in a hollow square as a back-ground and opposite was the group of officers present. Among them were Lt. Col. Theodore Davis Boal, Lt. Col. Comley, Lt. Col. Ellis, Lt. Col. W. F. Reynolds, Maj. Thompson, Maj. Welty, Maj. H. Laird Curtin and Capt. Frederick Reynolds, of Bellefonte troop; Capt. McKinney, of the Tyrone troop, and Capt. Soule, of the Boal troop.

Col. Comley, commandant of cadets at The Pennsylvania State College, had been commissioned to personally decorate Col. Leitzel and after making the presentation speech pinned the beautiful Cross on the left breast of the veteran. Felicitations followed, of course, and then the entire assemblage was invited to mess in the company mess hall, where army food was served to all. Following that a reception was held in the barracks and it was well into the night before the last of those who had gathered as witnesses of the unusual ceremony departed.

—Lieut. Col. Rowland B. Ellis was in Bellefonte on Monday and that evening made an official inspection of Troop L, First Pennsylvania cavalry. The Colonel came to Bellefonte from Boalsburg where on Saturday evening he inspected the machine gun troop of the First cavalry.

—Frank B. Krebs, who farms what is known as No. 3 farm on the back road to State College, was a "Watchman" office visitor yesterday, and about the only trouble he has now is plowing through the mud road a mile or two between his home and the state road, but he generally manages to get through all right.

—W. W. McCormick, of Pottery Mills, was a "Watchman" office caller on Tuesday while in town looking after some business matters. Y., where she has been living with her sister, Mrs. Bittel, since the death of her mother. Mr. Bittel has purchased an insurance business at Dillsburg, York county, and is moving his family there. —Miss Maude Aldrich, who spent the early part of the week in Bellefonte, speaking in the Presbyterian church Sunday evening, in the High school and Academy Monday, and in the High school at State College, Tuesday, on Moral Welfare, was a most pleasing and interesting talker, presenting her subject in such a way as to leave a pronounced impression on the younger generation. It is altogether probable that Miss Aldrich will be brought back to this community at an early date.

—George W. Sherry, who for more than a quarter of a century looked after the welfare of the traffic on the Lewisburg and Tyrone railroad by seeing that the track was kept in perfect shape on his division, until his retirement four months ago, was a "Watchman" office caller on Tuesday, and incidentally remarked that it was his first trip down town in several weeks, he having been housed up by an attack of rheumatism. A Modest Beginning.

A year or more ago Guy Bonfatto opened a fruit stand in the Arcade on High street. Really it could scarcely be dignified with the name even of stand, for all we recall he had two boxes of oranges, a bunch of bananas and a few heads of lettuce. There were no counters, no scales, no wrapping paper nor anything else to indicate that Guy had had a cent to invest in fixtures.

Walk into his place today and you'll see a well appointed fruit store. Shelves stocked with goods and the floors pyramided with fresh fruit and vegetables for almost every table requirement. How has he done it? He came to Bellefonte from Renovo, where he had been the motive power of a push-cart ice cream enterprise up to the time he was called into the government service. Three of his brothers were in the Italian army and being a naturalized American citizen Guy went to France to fight for Uncle Sam. He was over there nine months and while he was in action most of the time he was luckier than his brothers, for two of them were wounded. He came home with fifty dollars in cash and a ten thousand dollar life insurance policy, which he very sensibly declared he is going to hold onto even though a lot of well meaning but misguided friends have advised him to drop it.

But to get back to the answer to the query: How has he converted that primitive fruit stand into an up to the minute fruit and produce store? In the revealing of that secret lies a lesson to every boy and girl who reads this. He has had nothing handed to him. He has been handicapped by partial unfamiliarity with our language and especially when starting he had to allay a suspicion that he was not dealing fairly that arose out of some mistakes in computation that were made because he really hadn't learned to calculate and make change readily. All of these liabilities he fought against and overcame. Hustling all day long he strove to make his wares look attractive, seemingly never tired and always cheerful. Then when a big day's work was done, and others of us would think we had earned rest, he would get into a truck and use up many of the night hours on a trip to Lock Haven where he would meet a car of fruit or vegetables from the south and be back with the load in time to open up again next morning.

It has been a killing pace that that boy has been going but when we come to think of how some other men in Bellefonte, who are taking it easy now, got theirs we recall that they went this same killing pace in their younger days and they are nearing and over seventy in fairly fit condition today.

Enthusiastic; hard work, and no magic wand, has turned Guy Bonfatto's poor little stand of a year or more ago into a very prosperous business. And we miss our guess if that foreign born boy isn't going to be a rich man some day.

He wholesales both fruit and vegetables and for that reason you can almost count on getting anything in those lines that are in season at his place any time you call.

In Society.
