They were walking along the right hand side of the road about midway between the old Titan Metal company plant and Milesburg when they relating to the traffic and parking noticed a car coming back of them and another coming toward them from Milesburg. Miss Cooney, Miss Elizabeth Saylor and Mrs. John Mignot were ahead walking arm in arm, and they got as far off the road as possible. In fact Mrs. Mignot was in on the edge of the road but the car in passing them from the rear, either caught her coat and threw her against by the right rear fender, in any event she was knocked down.

It was quite dark and the accident happened so quickly that none of the Mr. and Mrs. Wray, parents of her sonladies are able to tell just how it occurred. Those walking in the rear saw Miss Cooney fall and promptly went to her assistance. She was found unconscious and there in the darkness it was impossible to tell how badly she was hurt. In the meantime the car that hit Miss Cooney only ran a short distance then turned around and ran back to the scene of the accident, and it was then learned that the driver was Fred Garbrick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Garbrick. He had gone for a little drive to Milesburg and had taken Edward Brown with him. The only explanation he could give of the accident was that the bright lights of the car coming toward him had blinded him so that he did not see the women alongside the road and the first knowledge he had that he had hit attention to a lady's hat on the fender of the machine. He then stopped, turned around and went back. He also brought some of the hikers to
