PLEASANT GAP.

Civil war incidents, real in character, seem to be appreciated by the majority of the American people. With this fact in view I would like to relate a few incidents that might possibly interest some of your readers.

President Lincoln made a brief tour to the front before his election. Like that great and good man (the soldier's friend) the late Andrew G. Curtin, he was in his element when visiting the soldiers.

On one of these occasions Lincoln visited the boys at City Point, Va. He went from tent to tent, shaking hands with the boys and giving them encouragement in every possible way.

He was a "plain man," with an abiding faith in the "common people," and a great love for them. They loved him, too, and understood him. He was nature's nobleman, simplicity itself, and when his work was done he laid down his burden and went to his rest among the sorrowing of the entire world.

Now one more little incident, which I never can forget. I will designate it as Heaven's part of the Civil war. Two Methodist ministers who had served as chaplains to the lost cause, going down from Memphis to Grenada to a campmeeting, got into conversation about the way the war terminated.

LEMONT. The wheat and grass look fine at this time. This month has brought lots of rain for these parts. Most of the schools in College township will close this week.

JACKSONVILLE. John Holmes has opened an ice cream parlor in our town. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Grubb were Sunday callers at the Joseph Neff home.

just. It was plain to me that God was with us. That monster mass of humanity camped around Signal Hill began uncoiling like a great serpent, stretching itself for miles. The conflict came at Resacca. The men fought like heroes, and I prayed until I was drenched with sweat, and still they beat us.

"So it went day after day. It was just fight and fall back; hold the fort through the day and dig out at night, until I got disgusted. Then it occurred to me that faith without works was dead, or rather it was suggested to me by a soldier, who remarked as I rode by; 'If that preacher would get musket he could do a lot more towards licking the Yankees than all his praying will do.'

"I made up my mind there was an Achan in the camp, and I went to the brigade commander and told how I had fasted and prayed, and wrestled and fought and still there was no sign from heaven. He wasn't a saint exactly, but his parents were pillars in the church up here about Trenton, and I knew he had been raised right, and I knew he had a good opinion of the heaviest artillery, the most men and the advantages in the lay of ground."

"Well," he said, "my opinion is that heaven is on the side that has the heaviest artillery, the most men and the advantages in the lay of ground."

"I did worse than you, for I did fall from grace. I got so disheartened that I said right out; there is no just God! and I was clear off the track for a month or two.

"A letter from my mother brought me to my senses and I went at it again. I feel satisfied that if the devil, or some other influence, hadn't interfered with my prayers, backed as they were by thousands of others, our flag would have been floating over the capitol at Washington today; as it is it is a mystery that I cannot fathom.

"My Colonel used to tell me to keep it up; not that it would have any effect on the result, but it would keep the account square with the Yankee chaplains who were also sending up petitions. I never could make out whether he meant that as a joke or whether he was in real earnest.

"I had an uncle who was a Quaker, and I told him about it. He said: 'Thomas, war is an ungodly, wicked thing, and God takes no part in it. He may have done so against those who were obstructing the progress of light, but He has no part or lot in a foolish fight between brother and brother, and thou may depend upon it that thy prayers were never heard.'

"Sometimes I think the old man was right."
