The ladies of the Patriotic Sons of America held their annual picnic in Noll's grove on Saturday evening last. It was a decided success, socially and financially. The attendance was up to their anticipations and all were happy and satisfied.

Mrs. Raymond Melroy, accompanied by Miss Ruth Melroy and two of their friends, have been taking in New York city the past week, object—sight seeing and generally speaking, having an enjoyable time. They will drop off at Atlantic City for a few days on returning home and see what they can see, and, visiting Atlantic City for Mrs. Melroy is like visiting at home as she taught school for several terms adjacent to Atlantic City some six or eight years ago and enjoys meeting her old friends in Jersey.

Some men profess to be highly moral, put on the appearance of being in easy circumstances, and even go so far as to make great pretensions as to what they are worth. The facts may be exactly the reverse of all this, their sole object being to get wives who are able to keep them. The woman who falls a prey to a swindler of this character is truly an object of pity, but not more so than the man who gets roped in by a woman who marries merely to keep out of the old maid row. If one of these biters happens to get bitten, for them there is no rest, no comfort, no happiness; they must abide the consequences.

There seems to be a slump in the market situation of chickens. The market declined 5 cents per pound the past week and a further reduction is anticipated at an early day. Over production is the cause. Our community never raised so many chickens as were produced the present season. Farmer Spicher, who purchased the Larimer farm some time ago, has over 1700 head of chickens. T. E. Jodon has over 200, James Bilger about 225, Bent Bell has something like 500 to his credit and a number of others have over fifty. As over production has a tendency to bring down prices it is but reasonable to suppose that it is still further decline will be the result at an early day.

Have you not noticed that the boy who respects his mother less, and his father more, is invariably, or almost invariably, a bad boy; and that the girl who hates her father, or clings especially to her mother, is apt to prove a failure? Possibly you have not noticed particularly, but you will find it about that way if you take the trouble to make a few notes as you go along. Mamma's girls are sometimes beautiful, very beautiful but that is their only stock in trade, and it is too often counterbalanced by an irritable disposition, bad temper, or disagreeable spirit. A most notable characteristic of this class is their dislike for men. They rarely love their fathers or brothers, and merely respect their husbands. They prefer the mother's company to that of the father or husband, and go to her for all their advice and with all their troubles. Having married because it was the best thing to do, rather than because they expected to be happier in that state, they take but little interest in making home pleasant and enjoyable. The great majority of wives who delight in henpecking their husbands were "mamma's girls." They regard a husband in the light of a household convenience, to be used as a handy utensil. They see but little in any man to admire except his money, and his services as a general waiter, a convenience as it were. Take notes and make observations as you go along and you will discover that I am not far wrong.

As the fruit preserving season is now on it might be beneficial to many, more especially the ones who are just embarking in the housekeeping proposition, to give the views of an expert on the subject. When I say or use the word expert I am referring to Ruthie, my room-mate for 10, these many years. I think she knows all about the game. I quietly interviewed her and here are her experiences. Rich "pound for pound" preserves and jam can be put away without sealing; simply tie up with 2 or 3 thicknesses of paper over which put a cloth. Look at them occasionally and if signs of working appear, heating up thoroughly will sweeten them again. Remove carefully any mould that may show itself.

To prevent preserves and jams from sugaring add a teaspoonful cream tartar to every gallon of fruit before it is quite cooked. A very little tartaric acid will answer the same purpose. Use small jars for preserves. Preserves that are candied may be liquefied by setting the jar in a kettle of cold water. Let the water boil for an hour or more. The "pound for pound" custom of preserving fruit has been growing less for many years, though many still prefer the preserved to canned fruit.

Pare fruit for canning and preserving with a silver knife that it may not blacken. Melted paraffine poured on top of jellies, jams, etc., also on top of canned fruit when the covers are discolored, will be all the covering necessary, excepting a cloth or paper to exclude dust. Use fruit before it is too ripe.

Fruit, to extract the juices well, should be brought to a scald. Put in a stone jar, mash and stand the jar in a kettle of boiling water. Scald thoroughly and strain through a coarse cloth; squeeze but slightly that the jelly may be clear. Jelly should not stop boiling until done. Do not make too large a quantity at once. Jelly is much nicer if strained before putting in glasses. Do not squeeze nor stir, but let drip slowly through. Placing it near the stove will prevent the jelly thickening and hasten the straining process. A pan or shallow preserving kettle is best for boiling jelly. Do not use a brass kettle.

Set the glasses, when filling them, on a folded damp towel, or drop a silver spoon in the glass to prevent breakage. Mould may be prevented by covering the surface of the jelly thickly with powdered sugar.

P. S.—You can use this or dump it—up to you—if it goes in I'll catch hell—but nothing bothers me—well.

This time they were missing for months and were discovered only recently by J. I. It is a question whether they traveled overland or followed the course of some stream to their present location. In any event they have not been idle and the foundation of their new home is well under way.
