Sympathetic Cook.

The young wife entered the kitchen rather nervously and, after hesitating for a few seconds, said to the cook: "Oh, cook, I must really speak to you. My husband is always complaining. One day it is the soup and the next day it is the fish, and the third day it is the roast. In fact, it's always something."
The cook replied with feeling: "Well mum, I'm sorry for you. It must be awful to live with a gentleman like that."

THE AMERICAN WALNUTS.

The above title indicates the subject matter of an interesting article by Joseph S. Illick in a recent issue of American Forestry.

The writer says that of the fifteen varieties of walnut trees in the world, four are native to the United States. The black walnut and butternut are found in the eastern part of the country, the California walnut in the Gold Hunter's State, and the southwestern walnut in Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona. The black walnut is undoubtedly the best-known of the walnut family. The name refers both to the color of the wood and the bark.

The black walnut bears little resemblance to any other tree except the butternut. Both varieties of trees may be distinguished by their rough unsplitting husk, and by their chambered or interrupted pith.

The butternut is sometimes called the white walnut, and may be distinguished by its gray bark, dark-brown pith, elongated nut, hairy husk, and leaflets numbering eleven to seventeen, in comparison with the thirteen to twenty-three of the black walnut. The wood is lighter in color than that of the other tree, but is in no way inferior as an ornamental wood. The natural finish brings out the quiet tones and the soft luster of the grain in a most pleasing way.

The early settlers were most extravagant in their uses of the black walnut, due partly to the fact that the tree usually grew upon the best land in the fertile valleys and bordering foothills. Nor was it possible to reach a market with the timber. Many trees were felled and burned simply to clear the ground. Others were split into fence rails and were used to make the rough, knocked-together furniture, or to build the cabins.

Today the wood brings a very high price. Every small piece of the timber is made into some useful article. It is greatly in demand for all kinds of furniture and musical instruments.

It is said that walnut trees are not difficult to grow. It is recommended that the nuts be planted where the trees are wanted, as in transplanting the roots are easily injured. Considerable work along this line has been done in various parts of the United States by forest organizations and by Boy Scouts. In 1919 more than one hundred and fifty bushels of black nuts were planted in a single nursery in southern Pennsylvania, and in 1920 more than two hundred bushels by the Pennsylvania Department of Forestry.—Exchange.

KEEP TO LEFT WHILE WALKING ON ROADS.

The rule of the road is "keep to the right," of course, but those who take the risk of walking along country roads filled with flying motors are advised to reverse it and keep to the left. This suggestion, which comes from the American Automobile association, accords with common sense. By walking on the left the pedestrian faces the oncoming car and is in no danger of being hit by the overtaking car. He has an opportunity to step aside as if he is nearer the middle of the road than he should be, or if the motorist selfishly takes more than his share of it. But he cannot so easily determine the position of a car coming up from behind.

It is the business of those who ride to show due regard for the safety of those about. Unfortunately a large number of persons who drive cars behave as if they had exclusive ownership of the highway. They may not intend to run the pedestrian down, but they take little pains to give him a reasonable amount of room; and when one car passes another going in the same direction he is lucky if he escapes with being crowded into the gutter. Such recklessness has made the pleasant and healthful practice of taking country walks full of needless perils, especially in the case of those whose faculties are not all alert as they were once.

The motorist is not always to blame for the accidents to pedestrians. These have their full share of recklessness. It is pointed out that at night one foot on the right of the road often cannot be seen by the driver until it is too late. At curves in the highway the danger is very great, day or night. No one can tell what careless drivers or walkers may do, to be sure; but if the latter will remember to walk on the left hand side of the road, when there is no distinct path or sidewalk for foot traffic, there would be a material diminution in the number of accidents.

Swine Survey Being Made.

Swine growers in Centre county will be particularly gratified to learn that the scope of a survey now being made by the State Department of Agriculture, with which the Pennsylvania State College is co-operating in determining the exact status of the pork industry in the county. The census of 1920, giving the number of hogs and their value, does not cover the problems of feeding, management, marketing, and losses through disease. It is to obtain data to these problems, that the survey is being made. Mr. John Beck, a Penn State graduate in animal husbandry, now farming in Welker township, has been engaged by the State Department to visit representative farms in Centre county and obtain the desired information called for in the questionnaire blank. The farms that will be visited will not be singled out for the purpose of analyzing the business, but to compile the results of several thousand farms and point out definite facts relating to the State's swine industry. Centre county farmers will undoubtedly co-operate to the fullest extent in furnishing the necessary data, in view of the value of such a survey. The results for the entire State will be summarized and probably published in bulletin form at a later date.

"Vanity of Vanities, All is Vanity," So Said King Solomon.

People have been accused of wearing glasses for pride. This is wrong. We have prescribed for thousands of patients, any of whom would have willingly paid ten times the price of glasses if they could have obtained the comfort and relief otherwise. False pride had kept some people from wearing glasses which to their sorrow was discovered only when an operation was imperative.
