BROTHERS ELECTED GOVERNORS.
In "Giard's" column in a recent issue of the Philadelphia Inquirer appeared the following, which will be read with interest by many Centre countians:
One of the prize stories related by that master storyteller, the late W. U. Hensel, of Lancaster, once Attorney General of Pennsylvania, revolved about an extraordinary historical incident.

A traveler riding on horseback, from Philadelphia westward through the State, stopped for a night's rest at a farm house. It was the day after election.

After the traveler had eaten a modest supper, the old farmer asked him if he had heard how the elections had resulted.

"No," said the stranger, "the returns had not all come in before I left the city."

"I just wondered," replied the host, "how the voting went. You see my son Bill was running for Governor here in Pennsylvania and my son John was running for Governor out in California."

The farmer was Mr. Bigler and the fact was that both Bill and John had been elected Governor of their respective States.

I recall no similar incident in American history where two brothers in the same year became Governor of a State.

John Bigler and William Bigler were a pair of remarkable men. The former was born in Cumberland county ten years before his younger brother.

They were printers in the office of the Centre Democrat at Bellefonte. John studied law and was a California "Forty-niner."

William went over to Clearfield county and started the Clearfield Democrat—a staunch supporter of Andrew Jackson. When but twenty-seven years of age he became a State Senator.

In the autumn of 1851 John was nominated by the Democrats for Governor of California and William was nominated by the Democrats for Governor of Pennsylvania.

As I said before, both were elected and John was re-elected for a second term but William was beaten on his second trial. However, he afterwards went to the United States Senate.

The production of crude petroleum in the United States in 1906 was 126,493,936 barrels. The country's oil refineries of today could handle that quantity in about 60 days.

My back was lame and ached a great deal, especially in the morning, making it hard for me to keep at my work. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills helping others so I used them. They were not long in relieving me of all signs of kidney trouble. My kidneys were soon acting regularly."

MOXLEY'S DIXIE MARGARIN RICH IN VITAMINES

Beginning of Our Canning Industry.

To Ezra Daggett belongs the honor of introducing canning as an industry in the United States (1815-1819). He had learned the art in the "old country," and practiced it in New York city, where he packed salmon, lobsters and oysters.

As early as 1821, William Underwood, of Boston, put up preserves in glass, but it was not until 1838 that he began to substitute tin.

Comically crude were the early cans. All were hand-made, and sixty a day was considered a large output. For the piece of tin required for each can was first drawn with careful compass then cut out by shears, while a tremendous amount of solder was used both for the seams and the cementing of tops and bottoms.

Amusing features of the early industry were the experiments in canning corn. Isaac Winslow, of Maine, was a pioneer in that special line.

It was first put up in a cumbersome way on the cob. This proving impracticable and wasteful, the kernels were cut off by the use of a knife curved to the cob. A machine worked by hand followed. Finally, and not until 1886, came the power-driven machine.

New Parcel Post Service.

The conversation over the garden fence had taken anything but a friendly turn. "An' if your boy 'Erbert ties any more cans on our dog's tail," was Mrs. Moggin's stern ultimatum. "e'll 'ear about it, that's all. Oh, an' per'aps you've done with the saucepan you borrowed last Monday."

"Erbert," asked Mrs. Grubb shrilly, "what 'ave you been doin' to Mrs. Moggin's dog?"

"Nothing, ma!" replied the small boy, unblushingly.

"There!" said the mother, triumphantly. "An' you returned the saucepan yesterday, didn't you, dearie?"

"Sent it by 'er dog!" replied 'Erbert, quite calmly.

—It's fine to wake up in the morning and hear the leaves whispering outside your window." "Yes, but I could never stand hearing the grass mown."
