One About Texas Wolves.

Colonel Homer D. Wade, famous Texas ranchman, was in Washington recently. A New England Congressman, who had never been farther west than Tidouite, Pa., asked him if there were any wolves in Texas.

"Any wolves in Texas?" repeated Wade. "Well, I should say there are wolves in Texas. Why, brother, it was only last winter that I had the most exciting wolf chase of my life. I was riding my roan pony through a sparsely settled section of the panhandle on my way to look at a bunch of cattle I was thinking of buying. Along about 2 o'clock in the morning I discovered to my horror that I was being followed by a pack of wolves. The noise they made was blood-curdling. As soon as they got within pistol shot I blazed away and put a bullet through the heart of the leader. Man, how glad I was to see the rest of the pack stop and devour him. I spurred my pony, hoping to reach a place of safety. But they still came on and I shot another, which they stopped to eat. I kept this up until I had shot seventeen of them and the last one was pursuing me at close range with his eye glistening in anticipation of a nice, fat, hot breakfast, and—"

"Wait a bit, wait a bit, old top," interrupted the New Englander, "according to your reckoning that last wolf must have had the other seventeen inside of him."

"Come to think of it," calmly replied Wade, "I recall that he did wobble just a trifle."—National Republican.

Male Farm Worker is Now Paid Less.

The average rate of wages for male farm labor for the entire United States, October 1, was $28.97 a month with board, according to the first of a regular series of quarterly reports from 1300 county crop reporters to the Department of Agriculture.

The average rate for the year 1921 was $30.14 a month without board. The average October 1, was $41.58, compared with $43.32, the average for 1921.

Safety First!

"Come right on in Sambo," the farmer called out. "He won't hurt you. Yoy know a barking dog never bites." "Sure, boss, Ah knows dat," replied the cautious colored man, but Ah don't know how soon he's going to stop barkin'."

LIKE IDEA OF CAVE MAN

Idea Advanced That Women Desire the Tiger in Husband, but Prefer It Latent.

Granted that, as history and literature have always implied, there is a tiger latent in every male. The American tiger has, you might say, taken himself to the taxidermist and got himself beautifully mounted as a rug. The American woman then sits on the rug, in front of the fire, and digs her little heels into the helpless fur. (There is really nothing else to do with a rug.) People always find charm in what they have not, even if they would choose, in preference, what they have. The American woman wanted her rug—and got it. But her imagination was going, inevitably, to play about the image of the traditional tiger before he went to the taxidermist. She does not really want a cave man—not yet, at least; she is too comfortable as she is. But she likes to think that her man could be a cave man if he wanted to. What she really wants is the true tiger lying down in front of her to dig her heels into, knowing all the time that the tiger could bite if it chose. Chivalry consists in not choosing to bite—not in being unable to.

So you get various writers who cater to the undistinguished millions, pretending that the visit to the taxidermist was only a feat; that the eyes will roll, and the claws unsheathe themselves, and the jaws snap. The feminine reader shivers with delight at the animation of her rug; she experiences that perfect condition of eating her cake and having it, too.—Katherine Fullerton Gerould in Harper's Magazine.

MEAN TRICK EVEN FOR SATAN

Man's Realistic Dream Would Seem to Constitute Almost Last Word in Torture.

They were discussing dreams. "I don't believe in dreams," Roberts announced.

"I don't particularly believe in them either," Asbury agreed, "if you mean by that that they foretell the future or explain the past, but some of them are certainly most terribly realistic."

"Well, what is the worst dream you ever had, anyway?" Roberts asked.

Asbury thought the matter over a moment.

"The worst one I can think of now is a dream I had just a few nights ago. I dreamed I was in hell and—"

"That certainly was bad enough!" Roberts interrupted.

"Yes, but wait; that's just the start of it! As I said, I dreamed I was in hell. However, I was getting along as well as could be expected, when the fall of the year came and the ragweed bloomed. My hay fever hit me with full force and I was nearly wild with sneezing when along came the old devil himself and took away my handkerchief!"—Kansas City Star

A Little Tree's Life.

I never see a little tree bursting from the earth, peeping confidently up among the withered leaves without wondering how long it will live and what trials and triumphs it will have. It will better and beautify the earth, love the blue sky and the white clouds passing by and ever join merrily in the movement and the music of the elemental dances with the winds. It will welcome the flower-opening days of spring, be a home for the birds and enjoy the summer rain. And when comes the golden peace of autumn days I trust it will be ready with ripened fruit for the life to come. I never fail to hope that if this tree is cut down it may be used for a flagpole to keep our glorious banner in the breeze, or be built into a cottage where love will abide; or if it must be burnt, that it will blaze on the hearthstone in a home where children play in the fire-light on the floor.—Enos A. Mills.

Battled With Wooden Swords.

It is recorded of the ancient Aztecs of Mexico that they went into battle with wooden swords, that they might not kill their enemies. The Aztecs were a fierce, warlike race. Their religion was the most bloodthirsty the world has ever known. The temples of their gods were scattered throughout the land, and thousands of human beings were sacrificed every year upon their altars. The victims were mostly prisoners of war. In their battles the Aztecs tried to kill as few of their enemies as possible, that they might have more to sacrifice.

April 22, 1519, Hernan Cortez landed at Vera Cruz, overthrew the Aztec kingdom and took permanent possession of the country for Spain. The story of the conquest is the foundation of the novel "The Fair God," by Gen. Lew Wallace.

New England Cranes.

A New England writer thus refers to the crane in 1532: "Of cranes there is a great store—they sometimes eat our corn and do pay for their presumption well enough—a goodly bird in a dish and no commodity."

Perhaps the fact that the crane made a "goodly dish" explains the disappearance of the crane from the Atlantic coast, where it now breeds only in Florida and its retreat westward beyond the Mississippi.

In Florida the sandhill crane is to be seen in the great Kissimmee prairies.

One of the tribal customs of the crane, so to speak, is the ceremonious dancing at the period of courtship when the lady and the gentleman crane are seeking to reach a matrimonial agreement.

TUBERCULOSIS DAYS DECEMBER 3 AND 8

Observance in Churches and Schools in Connection With 15th Christmas Seal Sale.

Harrisburg, Nov. 28.—Tuberculosis Day will be observed in the churches December 3 and in the schools December 8 as features of the Christmas Seal sale. In this connection John S. Fisher, Pennsylvania Chairman for the Christmas Seal sale, said:

"All church and educational workers are vitally interested in the physical, as well as in the intellectual, moral and spiritual well being of our people. It is, therefore, appropriate that church and school put forth their best efforts in conserving the health of our citizens. Inasmuch as the schools and Sunday schools deal with the welfare of the young people, they furnish an inviting field in the war against tuberculosis."

"The Christmas Seal has become a vital factor in bringing better health and longer life to the people of Pennsylvania. It is the means of preventing tuberculosis and of restoring to health those who have fallen victims to its ravages."

"We confidently put the case before the pastors, Sunday school superintendents and workers and teachers in our public schools. We earnestly solicit your help and ask you to emphasize on the days above designated the dangers and treatment of tuberculosis to the end that health may be improved and life prolonged, and particularly the part which the Christmas Seal plays in this great effort."

PINCHOT INDORSES SEALS

Gifford Pinchot, Governor-elect of Pennsylvania, indorses Christmas Seals in the following words:

"Every person is in danger while tuberculosis is permitted to take so many victims among us. The declining death rate, however, shows that the battle against the White Plague is a winning fight. The main springs of this fight are the widespread educational efforts to improve health habits, the providing of nurses, clinics and hospitals, health teaching in the schools, and nutrition work for children."

"In all of these efforts the Christmas Seal has an important part, which has increased in usefulness constantly since the Seal first appeared, fifteen years ago."

"The Christmas Seal is a very small thing. It costs only a penny. Everybody can devote a few pennies to Seals. Everybody, therefore, can help to lessen the danger to themselves and to us all from tuberculosis."

WOMEN INDORSE SEALS

The State Federation of Pennsylvania Women, at its annual convention in Reading, adopted a resolution indorsing the sale of Christmas Seals. The resolution follows:

Whereas, The fight to control and prevent tuberculosis is one of the most important and worthy activities in our State, and

Whereas, The Christmas Seal sale conducted by the Pennsylvania Tuberculosis Society and its affiliated local tuberculosis committees and organizations throughout the State is the means of financing this work, therefore be it

Resolved, That the State Federation of Pennsylvania Women in its 1922 convention indorse the Christmas Seal sale and urge its members throughout the State to buy and use Christmas Seals and do what they can to promote the campaign.

AWARD HONOR TO CONFUCIUS

Earliest Idea of the "Shadow Show" Said to Have Been Recorded 500 Years B. C.

That the earliest idea of a moving picture was recorded in the time of Confucius, the Chinese philosopher who lived 500 years before Christ, is the deduction drawn from study of the question by Will Day, a well-known figure in the English film world, who has exhibited in London a collection of relics and machines tracing the growth of the moving picture from the first primitive idea to its present form, says an exchange.

The "shadow shows" of Confucius are the first of all known endeavors to present animated pictures. The next period of progressive achievement is found in 1640, when Athanasius Kircher published a book in Latin entitled "Ars Magnalyce et Umbrae," in which a description and illustration are given of a moving picture which the writer had evolved with mirrors and a tallow candle for illuminant.

Included in the collection is the original disk which Eadweard Muybridge used to settle the controversy between two American millionaires on the Alto Panto race course as to whether the four feet of a trotting horse were off the ground at the same time.

STOLE MATERIAL FOR BAIT

Little Thing Like Conventionality Made No Sort of Appeal to Enthusiastic Angler.

Fishermen who make their own trout flies will go great lengths to obtain materials for the lures.

"Once," said the fly fisherman, "I spotted a bit of chenille that I thought could be twisted to good advantage on a trout hook. Unfortunately, it was part of the fringe of a wrap worn by a young woman I noticed on upper Broadway. Although it seemed mighty unlikely that I could get a piece of the chenille, I followed her for a few blocks. Then she turned into a movie theater and I followed, taking a seat directly behind her."

"As she seated herself the end of her wrap slipped down between her seat and the wooden back. With my pocket knife I snipped off a couple of pieces of the coveted material. I had great success with the fly that I made from that chenille."—New York Sun.

That Cure for Insomnia.

Blinkby suffered from insomnia, and his friend told him a sure cure.

"Eat a couple of bananas and drink two or three glasses of milk before going to bed," said he, "and I'll warrant you'll be asleep within half an hour."

Blinkby did as his friend suggested and went to sleep soon after his retirement, but this is what he dreamed:

The friend came on the scene with his head under his arm and asked if Blinkby wanted to buy his feet. Blinkby was negotiating with him, when the dragon on which he was riding slipped out of its skin and left him in midair.

While he was considering how he should get down, a bull with two heads peered over the edge of the wall and said he would haul Blinkby up if he would first climb up and rig a windlass for him.

So, as Blinkby was sliding down the mountainside, the conductor came in, and Blinkby asked him when the train would reach his station.

"We passed your station 200 years ago," the conductor said calmly, folding the train up and slipping it into his waistcoat pocket.

At this juncture Blinkby awoke and found he had been asleep almost ten minutes.

Welsh Music Chiefly Vocal.

Wales is a land of singers. The music of this small country has been chiefly vocal.

During the medieval period the Welsh bards exercised much influence. Music was so united with poetry, philosophy and the sciences that a wide education was necessary to qualify a bard for his high rank.

The Irish harp was introduced into Wales by Prince Griffith, in the Twelfth century. It became a sign of distinction to carry a harp. Only a freeman was allowed to possess one, and to be seen without it meant disgrace.

The national anthem of Wales is called "The Men of Harlech." In the small town of Harlech, on the Welsh coast, is a famous old castle which was besieged for several years. It finally surrendered to the Yorkist troops in 1463. The song dates from that time.

Burke's Peerage.

"Burke's Peerage" is the name usually applied to a publication entitled "Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary of the Peerage and Baronetage of the United Kingdom." It was first compiled in 1826 by John Burke, an Irish man of letters. It contained the names of all the British peers and baronets in alphabetical order. The publication is still issued annually and as an authority on the genealogy of leading British families.
