Finding Substitutes for Hard Coal.

The New England States, which have been the principal market for anthracite coal in recent years are growing tired of the constant quibbles and threats of tie-ups between miners and operators, and are taking steps to find a substitute fuel so they will no longer be dependent on hard coal. The west and northwest did that very thing some years ago, and but comparatively little anthracite is now used in that region. The anthracite operators and the miners alike are apt to find themselves with a constantly dwindling market for their product, as the consumers do not propose to freeze nor to be kept in constant anxiety while waiting for them to settle their differences.

Sugar or Candy.
Granulated, lump, pulverized and brown sugars, though differing in texture and flavor, are practically alike in composition. They contain little or nothing but sugar. A pound of candy may be considered the equivalent in fuel value of a pound of sugar. Water which has no fuel value, is used in making candy, but so, too, are chocolate and nut meats, which have higher fuel value of a pound of sugar. Water of sugar in thick sirups, such as honey and molasses, is about three-fourths of a pound to the pound, and in jellies, jams and rich preserves, about one-half of a pound to the pound.

Nome Facing Famine.
Nome, Alaska, is facing a famine as the result of being swept by fire recently. The flames destroyed some of the buildings made historic by the famous gold rush. The estimated damage is $200,000. Starvation faces the people on account of one of the largest grocery stores going up in the flames.

SCIENCE TRANSFORMS DREADED DEATH VALLEY.

Science has started the transformation of bleak Death Valley, the most forbidding part of all the far-flung Mojave desert. It may become a veritable Garden of Eden.

Chicago capitalists have completed plans for the establishment of a magnificent health resort near the Stovepipe wells, where water can be raised in abundance from a depth of less than twenty feet; California grape growers are planting hundreds of acres of vineyards; the department of agriculture has established a station for the propagation of date palms, and private ranchers are slowly but surely forcing back the domain of desolation with the aid of irrigation.

Senteined by desolate mountains containing land lying hundreds of feet below the sea level, swept by burning sandstorms and shimmering in the tropical heat, Death Valley has been a synonym for horror in the west since the first emigrant train dared it. Blistering wastes. The very names of the peaks, gorges and springs whisper of tragedy.

Furnace creek, Funeral mountains, Lost hills, Hearn canyon, Disaster peak, Hell canyon—these and a dozen other fearsome titles tell of the dread of the early pioneers and prospectors. Panting wanderers, stumbling across sparkling springs, quaffed the cool waters to write out their lives in the throes of arsenic poisoning. Mirages—mocking illusions wrought by its sand and heat on disordered minds, ever beckoned to destruction, until even the dauntless prospectors pictured the valley as a lair of demons.

Drifting sand dunes obliterated marked trails and buried the few springs of safe water until the most experienced desert wanderer hesitated to face its terrors. Bleaching bones long marked the toll of human lives claimed by the merciless valley and hardy Indians described its arid wastes as the "land forgot by the Great Spirit."

But with the coming of the automobile all has changed. Good roads span the storied wastes. Gypsum, borax and other nonprecious minerals have vied with gold and silver to attract population and capital. And now the green mantle of agriculture is slowly covering the more favored positions of this erstwhile sea of desolation.

From the hidden waters of the Armargosa river, flowing for miles under ground, life giving moisture has been developed. Hundreds of wells have tapped precious water deep in the desert's stony breast. Fatal springs have been located and marked with warnings to guide the wanderer. Fruits of the tropics are springing forth in profusion, and thousands of acres of once sterile sand are beginning to blossom.

And now the dry hot climate has been enlisted in the battalions of health. Scientists and experts in agriculture assert the very elements that so long fought man will become his best allies. Isolation of the valley from the surrounding world will safeguard its orchards, vineyards and gardens from the vegetables insect scourge.

Funicular to San Marino
That rock-citadel of the tiny republic of San Marino, in Italy, which for centuries has defied assault by armies, is soon to capitulate to the funicular. The new line, which will branch off from the main railroad near Rimini, will make the steepest part of the ascent, it is stated, upon the longest series of railroad arches in the world—more than a mile. San Marino, which till now has been a sleepy community of shepherds and truck gardeners, is making a brave bid for the tourist trade. Enjoying a magnificent natural vista as one can see anywhere in Europe, it is preparing to assist nature with modern hotels and sport grounds. But gambling remains under the ban as always. Any time in the last half-century the poor herdsmen and land tillers of San Marino could have made themselves rich by granting one of the many requests of foreign companies for a gambling concession, similar to the one that relieves the citizens of Monaco of all tax burdens. But San Marino, on moral grounds, has continued to say no.

Boy Scouts Aided Sailors
When the United States fleet recently anchored in Hawaiian waters a number of the vessels docked at Hilo. Here the sailors had an opportunity of seeing the volcano and other interesting sights.

An official committee was formed to take charge of the entertainment of the visitors and the information work. This latter duty was placed in the hands of the local scout council. "About 150 of our scouts turned out for this good turn," states a report from Hilo. "Some of these boys came over 180 miles to take part in the work, and paid their own expenses for travel and food. The scouts took charge of information booths, kept flags used in street decorations, in correct position, and assisted the police at the regatta and concert, during the parade, and in traffic work."

Pertinent Question
A widely known advertising man, whose business requires that he make frequent trips to other cities, has a son about five years old. On these trips it has been the father's custom to buy a small present for his son, but, on a recent trip it slipped his mind entirely. On his return, while he kissed his wife, the son stood near by expectantly. However, the father did not produce his usual gift. "Papa," finally queried the little fellow, "you work for money, don't you?" "Yes," replied the father. "Why?" "Well," rejoined the son, "what have you been doing these last two weeks?"—Indianapolis News.

What Makes Your Light Bills Go Up and Down?

In Winter you use your electric lights nearly three times as many hours each day as in Summer.

In Summer it doesn't get dark until 8 o'clock, and you spend your evenings on the porch or out in the car.

Now the nights are getting longer. The comfort of a big arm chair and a book in the soft glow of an electric light is more alluring than the chilly out-of-doors. Vacations are over and everyone is home again. More rooms are occupied. Reading, entertaining and radio—all make later bed times. The home fairly radiates with the good cheer of electric light.

The chart above shows that with the changing of the seasons the electric light bills change. In June the average use of electric lights is two hours and fifty minutes, and in December it is over six hours.

We are on the upswing of the chart now. That's why your bill seems higher this month.

"Of All the Conveniences in the Home, Electricity is the Cheapest."
