The practice of naming negro slaves and grog shops for George Washington brought a vigorous protest from the Missouri Intelligencer of Old Franklin a quarter of a century after the death of the "Father of His Country." This was the first newspaper in the United States published west of St. Charles, Mo. In the issue of April 29, 1823, the Intelligencer registered this editorial protest against the promiscuous use of Washington's name:

"This is the Christian name of one-eighth of the masculine inhabitants of the United States. This name was dear to every American when it conveyed the idea of the father of freemen, but now it serves no other purpose than that of distinguishing one part of mankind from the other. It is universally made a very pack-horse. Every stupid blockhead thinks it the greatest tribute of respect he can possibly pay to the memory of the hero to call a son, a negro or a grog shop by the same name. It is a practice scandalously common for publishers to paint the likeness of the hero on a board, hang it on a post by way of a sign, hold it up to the vulgar to gaze at as boys gaze at a monkey, and to beguile silly travelers to become their guests, who judge of what is in the house by the sign. What has the father of liberty done that his name should thus be consigned to infamy and his likeness to contempt?"

History's Long List of Great "Southpaws"

Cheer up, all ye southpaws. A delver into obscure matters of history has unearthed something that should please each and every one of you. It is really something to give you reason to put on airs of superiority. Are you not pleased to learn that Alexander the Great used his sword with his left hand? Charlemagne, the patron of scholars, used his pen with his left hand, if he did any writing at all. Also the Pharaohs were left-handed and so were the greater Caesars. In the period between 2500 B. C. and 15 B. C. a left-handed man was considered "the darling of the gods" and was rushed into high office. Yet, the left-handed have had to suffer under instructors who tried to make them change a physical habit. Even some educationalists claim that left-handed pupils fall far below the average level of school efficiency. In fact, the left-handed have been feared at probably everywhere except on the baseball field.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Old Monarchical Idea

The name "Divine Right of Kings" is given to a doctrine that was promulgated in England in the seventeenth century. It asserted that kings held their authority by divine appointment and were earthly representatives of the Deity. This principle relieved the sovereign of all responsibility toward his subjects, and gave him absolute claim to their obedience. The chief defenders of this dogma were Salmasius, Hobbes and Sir Robert Filmer; while Milton, Algernon Sydney and Harrington were its uncompromising opponents. The controversy died a natural death on the accession of the House of Hanover. In the Bill of Rights (1689) the right of the people to depose the sovereign, to alter the order of succession, and to confer the sovereignty on whomsoever they may think proper is distinctly set forth.—Kansas City Star.

Initiative Wins

When initiative is absent, we become mechanical beings with no keenness for advancement; and if all were afflicted that way the world would cease to progress; for we are here today just because men of initiative have acted in the past. So it is well to be buoyant and brisk to take another step which will bring a benefit both to ourselves and others. There are thousands of things in life that are ours if we will but claim them; but we have failed because we have never heard their call, or thought the call was to someone else and not to us. We need to arouse ourselves and go in and possess, otherwise we shall be left behind.—Exchange.

Craw in a Tattie Field

There was recently appointed to a country parish church a young minister who, although a clever chap, is very much attracted to his "paper" during his sermon. This falling of his does not find favor with a few of his congregation, and the other Sunday, as a few of them were going home from church, one of them, the village schoolmaster, remarked: "That was a very scholarly address we got today from the minister. Don't you think so, Mr. Blunt?" "Humph!" replied Mr. Blunt, a plain old farmer. "He jest minded me o' a craw in a tattie field; twa dabs an' a look up!"—Toronto Globe.

Crops North of "53"

Wheat, oats and similar grain have been found to ripen satisfactorily in that part of Canada north of the fifty-third parallel. Four varieties of wheat have been tried, some ripening in ninety-eight days. The yields varied twenty-three to forty bushels, depending on the variety, and from fifty-four to seventy-three bushels of oats to the acre were obtained, depending also on the variety planted. The experiment is considered important for Canadian development.

Lignite Valuable

Lignite is a brownish black coal in which the alteration of vegetable material is produced further than in peat, but not so far as subbituminous coal. It is found principally in Arkansas, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee and Texas. Lignite may be used for fuel in the lump form as mined, provided it is consumed near the point of production. If this is not done, it is desirable, if not important, to use it in briquettes or in a gas produr.
