Some Good Pointers in Art of Bait-Casting.

"My system of bait-casting differs from the orthodox style in this way: says William C. Vogt a master angler. The rank and file of casters use only the power of their arms, shoulders and back, but I bring into action all the muscles right down to my toes. I cast just about as most pitchers throw the ball. When I bring the rod back of my head to start the cast, I raise my left leg until it is parallel with the ground. As the cast proceeds, I lower the left leg and raise the right one rearward. I thrust the left arm out straight to balance the right. Thus I am able to put all force into the effort. Every part of me acts in unison to apply all my strength to the end of one arm. The termination of the cast finds me in the position as a pitcher the moment the ball is half-way to the plate. I am bent midway over, forward; my right arm is stretched out straight ahead, my left leg is off the earth. That posture leaves me ready to strike the fish if he should take instant hold of the bait. If he should rush ahead with it, I am prepared to take up the slack with the length of the right arm and the arc of the rod's circle. Of course, such a full body swing cannot be used in a rowboat, but I do most of my fishing from the shore.

Vogt's particular system is so effective that he can take a bait-casting rod and a 24-pound test line, or No. 60 thread, and defy countless persons to snap the line by sudden jerks, pulls or going slack. He has done this to prove that large fish can be landed on very light lines, if properly played—that there's no defence for play-two of three-pound bass for a half hour with a young tree as a rod and a clothes-rop for a line, any more than there is for a huntsman using a machine gun on ducks.—From Everybody's Magazine for May.

A Talk with a Bellefonte Man

Mr. Montgomery Tells Something of Interest to Bellefonte Folks.

There's nothing more convincing than the statement of someone you know and have confidence in. That's why this talk of Mr. Montgomery of Race St., should be mighty helpful here in Bellefonte.

H. F. Montgomery, painter & railroad fireman, Race St., Bellefonte, says: "The constant jarring on the railroad brought on kidney trouble and I had cutting pains across my back. The ache across my kidneys became so intense I could hardly stand. I was also annoyed by the weak condition of my kidneys and I had to get up at night to pass the secretions. When I did a little work, I was well worn-out. Doan's Pills, from Runkle's Drug Store rid me of the attack."

Price 60c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Pills—the same kind that Mr. Montgomery had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

JOHN F. GRAY & SON,
Bellefonte 43-18-17 State College

The early switchboards made it possible for one "private line" to be "switched" to another, thus making inter-communication of a sort possible. The modern telephone Central Office has become possible only through thousands of improvements developed during the fifty years since the telephone was invented.

INTER-COMMUNICATION

The first two telephones in Pennsylvania were on a "private line," each connecting only with the other.

So it was with the next two; and the next.

Inter-communication between all telephones in the community came only with the first switchboard, in 1878.

To many people the continued development of this switching apparatus is the outstanding accomplishment of fifty years of telephone history.

They shake their heads at the thought of an ordinary conversation between two cities three or four thousand miles apart, and wonder at the strides of Science. But perhaps their sense of mechanics is most confused in considering the switchboard complications involved in the connection of any two telephones—"anywhere, any time"—without interference or confusion of the thousands of other calls being made simultaneously.

In cities like Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Scranton, and Harrisburg the most ordinary local call may pass through two "private branch" and two "Central Office" switchboards. A toll call from any point in Pennsylvania may pass through four or five central office switching mechanisms.

To match with improvement and simplification of the inherent complexities which accompany telephone growth is an undertaking which becomes more difficult each year.

Yet, at the present time, the general speed and reliability of connection are continually climbing, and the next ten years will show further attainment that should make the present service seem only commonplace.
