Consider the Children.

The Children's Seashore house at Atlantic City for invalid children the oldest and one of the largest institutions of its kind in America, was started in 1872 and incorporated in 1873. Since its incorporation it has taken care of 74,806 children and 12,-437 mothers, a total of 87,243 persons.

It was founded by Philadelphians for the poor invalid children of that city. Its field of usefulness has spread with its augmented capacity so that it has had little patients from Virginia, Massachusetts, and from as far west as Indiana. Twenty-three Atlantic City children received all the benefits it can bestow during the past year.

The Seashore house co-operates with the various hospital social service departments, Red Cross stations, day nurseries and child welfare bureaus. It is the pioneer in its field and is not affiliated with any other institution. During the past year patients were admitted through 142 such organizations. Its greatest field of usefulness is that of caring for children suffering with bone and joint diseases.

This class of diseases progresses very slowly. The period of convalescence is necessarily long. The average length of time of invalidism is two years. During the winter months the institution is devoted entirely to this phase of work. At the present time the winter capacity is 140 beds.

The fourth department of the institution is devoted to the summer outing children. Children convalescing from acute and chronic diseases whose general health is below par are allowed to regain their normal strength. Delicate, underweight and undernourished children are included in this class.

It is evident that the object of the Institution is to help in every possible manner, poor invalid or crippled children whose conditions are not a matter of choice. They had no voice in the matter. These conditions exist. It is truly a noble work to help to alleviate suffering and in many instances make self-supporting men and women.

Miss Helen Overton, of this place, gives her service for two months in the summer to this institution and heartily endorses all of the above.

If any reader feels inclined to contribute to so worthy a service, Miss Overton will be delighted to deliver such in the donor's name, to the proper source.
