Of course murderers who will doubtless pay the Meadville Wednesday. penalty of their crime in the electric . -Miss Bess McCafferty is here from Pittsgreat. This is not because fewer but for the reason that since the entaken advantage of the power invested in them to name the penalty for murder and in the majority of cases have placed the punishment at life imprisonment.

Since the above law was passed there have been two score or more murder trials in Pennsylvania and only seven men have been doomed to die in the electric chair. All the others who were convicted of first degree murder were given life imprisonment sentences. In the case of the seven men above referred to no death warrants have yet been issued for them and no date of electrocution set. And it is just possible that some of them may escape the chair.

Records at the penitentiary show that since the passage of the law making electrocution the means of inflicting the death penalty, one out of every four men eventually escapes that fate. To be more explicit, since 1914, 233 death warrants have been issued but only 167 men electrocuted. Fifty-eight were granted commutation to life imprisonment, four death warrants were recalled and four condemned men died before the date of their execution.

The largest number of electrocutions took place in 1922 when twentyseven men went to the electric chair while the following year had the lowest record of any, only four electrocutions taking place. But that year eleven commutations were granted.

Of the total number of death warrants issued two were for women, Louisa Thomas and Mattie Jones, both fonte. negroes, of Philadelphia. In the case of the Thomas woman her sentence was commuted to life imprisonment while the death warrant of Mattie Jones was recalled when the Supreme court ordered a new trial of her case.

Honey Crop Will be a Poor One This Year.

Centre county beekeepers are deploring the fact that the crop of honey this year will hardly be enough to pay for the trouble of keeping the bees. This is not because the busy little bee is less industrious than usual but for the reason that all flowers and blossoms so far have been lacking in their supply of the honey making neetar.

A farmer in Bald Eagle valley who has thirty-five colonies of bees has not been able to take a pound from them up to this time. Ordinarily a colony will produce from fifteen to twenty pounds during a seoson, but up to this time, the farmer declared, his entire thirty-five colonies have not stored up over fifty pounds of honey, and the season is almost over. He ascribes the fact to the dry weather which resulted in the flowers and blossoms being deficient in their supply of nectar.

Of course there is still the sumac and second crop of clover but they cannot be counted on to produce any great quantity of honey. There is also the buckwheat, but buckwheat honey is not considered a good marketable product, because it is too dark and much stronger than clover honey
