and DOROTHY MACKAILL

You have seen Dick in the rich blue, piped with white of the United States Navy. That was in "Shore Leave." You have seen him in the khaki of the army in "Classmates;" in the royal trappings of a military prince in "Just Suppose."

And now-greatest of all-the blue tunic And now—greatest of all—the blue tunic and sweeping Stetson of the old American army of the Indian wars. Leather booted for the saddle and the forced rides; a cavalry officer of the days when the prairie thundered to the hoof beats of flying squadrons pushing the frontier ever westward—when the Indian gave up his lands at a price that only those rich in the red blood of manhood qualified to make the story suggested by Dorothy Farnum.

Such an officer is young Ranson-dash ing and handsome. Out of his youthful folly comes one of the finest dramatic love stories ever brought to the screen. An epic of America made for the thrilling delight of Americans everywhere.

Length, 8 reels.

Story: Mary Philips, the daughter of a wealthy manufacturer, is in love with one of her father's employees when the war breaks out and he joins the army. Mary joins the Entertainment Committee of the Army and on the other side meets Fred Williams, her old sweetheart and their romance leads to the altar. Fred is called to the front and after he leaves, Mary discovers that the man who performed the ceremony is not a clergyman but an imposter. Mary writes Fred of this but he is unable to get in touch with her. Mary returns home with her baby and when her father threatens to take the child away after receiving word of Fred's death, she seeks out a minister and asks that he unite her in matrimony with the spirit of her dead lover. After he complies with this ridiculous request, Fred's mether walks into the church with her son. He and Mary walk out of the church without being married.

See the comedy scenes in the trenches. The benefit show in the army camp. A drama of laughter and tears and how a mother and sweetheart were re-united to a loved one in the parade for the Unknown Soldier.

This is an extraordinary picture story of love, war and peace, filled with tears, laughs, appeal and expectancy. The most remarkable picture production of the decade. In 8 massive reels.

Added on Wednesday "Fox News and Screen Snapshots. On Thursday a Pathe Comedy and a good single reel.

Friday and Saturday Sept. 24 and 25 "You'd be Surprised"

The sensational comedy novelty of 1926 from "The Ship that Sailed to Mars" by W. M. Timlin.

W. M. Timlin.

The high hat comedian absolutely tops everything he has ever done in his life before in this startling surprise offering! Hurrying down Fifth Avenue, New York, to his wedding, Raymond suddenly spins right off the earth up into a dizzy but delightful paradise of beautiful damsels, monstrous-sized animals and more fun than twenty everyday worlds like ours! Of course Raymond comes back to earth and marries the girl but—!

Added on Friday 8th Chapter of the "Snow In" Serial. On Saturday a first run two reel Fox comedy.
