THE LITTLE GIRL WITH A COM-PANY FACE.

Once on a time, in a far-away place, Lived a queer little girl with a company

And no one outside the family knew Of her everyday face, or supposed she had two. The change she could make with wondrous celerity. For practice had lent her surprising dexterity. But at last it chanced, on an unlucky day (Or lucky, perhaps, I would much better

To her dismal dismay and complete consternation. She failed to effect the desired transformation. And a caller, her teacher, Miss Agatha

Mason. Surprised her with half of her company

And half of her every day face peeping out, Showing one grimy tear track and half a pout.

Contrasting amazingly with the sweet smile That shone on her "company" side all the

The caller no sooner had hurried away Then up to her room the girl flew in dismay And, after a night spent in solemn reflection On the folly of features that can't bear inspection, She came down to breakfast, and walked to her place,

Calm; sweet, and serene, with her company face. Thenceforward she wore it, day out and day in, Till you really might think 'twould be worn very thin; But strange to relate, it grew more bright and gay.

And her relatives think 'twas a red letter day

When the greatly astonished Miss Agatha Mason

HALLOWEEN TOUR.

personally conducted tour through the vale of chance," the invitations for the Halloween party might read, and when the guests assemble at the house they will find the High Priestess of Witchdom, in her long black cape and peaked cap, waiting at the door to receive them. The house must be so dimly lighted that it is with great difficulty that the guests follow their guide up the stairs to the rooms where they are to take off their things.

When they have assembled once more in the hall, she leads them down-stairs to the hall below, where, their eyes now becoming more accustomed to the semidarkness, they see a huge stuffed figure leaning against the wall. his head made from a jack-o'-lantern placed over the wall lamp. In his and let there be huge blinking of owls hands he holds a tray which are piled as guides. Bats on strings flying little yellow and black bags with long about the room at every draft give a strings on them. In her high falset-to voice, the witch commands each girl to take a yellow one, and each boy a black one, and tie them about their against the wall and covered with dark draperies of some kind. The rugs and portieres may be used, and if they aren't sufficient a few yards of black muslin will fill in very nicely. As they enter the Vale of Chance, as As they enter the Vale of Chance, as the huge sign over the folding doors little while, suddenly and weirdly. reads, they must stop for a few minutes to propitiate the king, who sits at one side of the entrance. He is another stuffed figure, and as each one shakes his hand the cold shivers run over them, for his hand is a chamois glove stuffed with wet sand.

In the kitchen there are set up many games of chance. On the floor in the corner is a tub filled with water for bobbing for apples. The sink is filled with water, and tiny lighted candles, the variety that is used for birthday cakes, are stuck into walnut shells, and each guest sets one adrift and tries to blow it out. The number of the results are reserved. and each guest sets one adrift and tries to blow it out. The number of blows needed is the number of years before marriage. At the table pare apples and throw the parings over the shoulder to find true love's initial. In the laundry have a well made from one of the day as to leave the arms and legs free. Wear a pillowcase-like cloth over the head with a skull painted in black and slits for the eyes and mouth. White stockings drawn over the hands and feet complete the effect, and if the hands are encased in rubbands. the laundry have a well made from one of the tubs, and each guest can go in alone and look into it to see what he sees. If possible, let one of the boys lean over, wearing a mask. While they are trying this, others can be taking their turn at walking down the stairs backward with a mirror.

Before this begins to pall, let the witch toll a great cowbell, and announce that refreshments are in order. She leads her party into the din-ing room, where a regulation railroad lunch counter has been arranged by placing several tables, end for end, along one side of the room. She requests that every one look at his cr her charm. Each one tells the fortune of its possessor. The girl or boy who is to be first married gets the ring; the ones doomed to spinsterhood and bachelordom each finds a thimble or button. Those two who are to be blessed with riches get exist. blessed with riches get coins, and so on. Each boy escorts to the lunch counter the girl whose charm corresponds with his.

Silently they line up at the counter, behind which stands three ghosts, who behind which stands three ghosts, who place a paper plate before each guest with a portion of "devil's chow" on them. "Devil's chow" is simply ham and tongue sandwiches wrapped in black paper and sealed with a white skull, and the witch ladles tall glasses of "witch brew" from a caldron, which is filled with sweet cider. When these are disposed of, let the ghosts place pieces of pumpkin pie on the plates, and pass plates of cheese and doughnuts.

Something lively which will break up all formality should be used to begin the evening's good time.

If the guests are masked, make some arrangement for numbering them and guessing their identity. Do not permit this part of the program to last too long, as masks are hot and guests soon tire of the silent sitting and prowling about.

A unique way of guessing masked guests is to take them, one by one, before the others and ask questions

It will add a great deal to the hilar-which each must answer in a loud yof the evening if you can arrange voice, disguising it as best he or she ity of the evening if you can arrange to have a siren whistle from one of can. the boy's bicycles stationed at one of the dark corners to wail as the crowd peanuts, walnuts, pecans, almonds,

To a great many people the real party is the "eats," and it pays well to give a little extra time and attention to their preparation. Grandmother's cookies, made with raisin ears and a licorice tail, to look like a black cat, create no end of fun when passed around on a flat tray. Serve chicken salad in small white cups on which black owls have been pasted. Mix into the salad dressing tiny red devils cut from red peppers. Serve with it moon biscuits made by cutting large circles of dough, halving them and shaping into half moons. Apples scooped out and stuffed with celery and potato salad are attractive. Cubes of mild cheese carefully cut out look well served on flat dishes with a toothpick in each, the end of which has been blackened. Molosses kisses, first wrapped in oiled paper, should again be wrapped in little squares of orange or black paper and served from a basket. Ordinary white china plates, cups and saucers may be made decorative by pasting on them red devils, owls, bats and yellow jack-o'-lanterns.

Paper plates and cups, bought for a small sum and treated in the same manner or painted in water colors, are effective. A grinning face on the white plate is interesting.

Small individual pumpkin pies served in a frill of black paper may be easily eaten by hand. Pumpkin custards molded and served with a caramel or chocolate sauce is a pleasant surprise.

Vanilla ice cream may be made a deep orange color by adding vegetable coloring. Serve the ice quite flat and make a face on each by imbedding small chocolates for eyes, nose and Doughnuts dipped in white icing are most ingenious.

A basket of cloved apples may be served toward the last, and the guests asked to count the seeds to determine the years of life yet to come. If care is taken the cloves may be stuck in to look like a cat or an owl. Choose only the reddest, firmest apples.

Marshmallow children, made with a marshmallow head and body, raisin arms and legs and a chocolate face, cause no end of fun at the table. They might stand upright to hold the place

Ghost and devil decorations are attractive if the red and white idea is carried out throughout the evening. Little red devils cut from paper and strung about the room on gray thread give an unusually effective decoration if large white ghosts are used in con-trast. White cardboard and skulls arranged around flower vases on the piano, with a ghost and devil to receive at the door, help to carry out the idea. Ask the guests to take small cardboard ghosts from the pockets of the host and hostess and keep records on them of the evening's fun.

An owl party is odd and new. By careful planning most ingenious games, decorations and refreshments may be arranged. Use plenty of phosphorus paper for eyes in the owls weird effect. Tree stumps may be used with this party. Such a stump made of brown paper with a realistic back-ground may stand at the foot of necks to ward off the evil spirits that the stairs, and the guests asked to they may encounter.

Have the furniture all moved back

These record cards may easily be made at home, also, by pasting odd animals or lanterns on heavy card-board and adding a small pencil tied with a cord. With the owl decorations these cards should be bats. Owls

For a party not intended to be quite For a party not intended to be quite so spooky, the grinning pumpkin makes a splendid basis. The host and hostess should be dressed as huge pumpkins, the grinning face reaching the full length of the body; the costume made by stretching sheets of orange paper over wires to make it stand out like a pumpkin, then marking the face in black.

COSTUMES.

A good ghost costume is made by wrapping a sheet about the body in such a way as to leave the arms and legs free. Wear a pillowcase-like gloves a cold, clammy touch is added. Remember to glide slowly and act as front of white, as a ghost, and red devil back with a long tail and closely fitting headpiece. On the front of the gown wear a necklace of cardboard pumpkins and boarder the hem with black cats, witches and owls. Let the mask be an owl, and be sure to wear rubber gloves, to keep that clammy

PRIZES.

Choose funny things so far as possible for prizes. A long-necked black cat and a pumpkin man who howls long and weirdly may be bought in town. Small boxes trimmed up with ghosts, witches, etc., and filled with homemade nut fudge, peanut brittle or candy corn never fail to please. A doughnut carefully sugared and wrapped and placed in a fancy box is a surprise indeed.

GAMES.

Something lively which will break up all formality should be used to begin the evening's good time.

ed, the meats removed and a paper in- string, four inches apart, and suspend he does, then touch the forehead, nose serted, the halves again glued together. When eating the nuts, the guest will find these papers and be asked to perform the "stunt" written on it, something like the following:

these strings from doorways. With hands tied behind them, and at a given word, the guests being to eat. The raisins must be eaten from the string without the aid of the hands. It is a game that is full of fun and not so easily done as one would think.

THE GHOST'S TEST.

Announcing that the ghost would like to test out earthly people to see if they are fit to live throughout another year, the room is darkened and, one by one, the guests enter blindfolded. They receive the three tests and then are allowed to remain in the room and watch the others. The tests

The Icy Kiss—A piece of ice is wrapped in a thin cloth and passed across the guest's lips just as some one smacks the lips loudly near the face.

The Ghost's Mark—The ghost stands with a saucer in his hand and and chin. The saucer which the guest holds has lampblack on the bottom!

The Ghost's Blessing—Weird words are said, and the guest is asked to pull a string which brings him the ghost's blessing. Confetti falls on his head. When they have all passed the tests they are odd sights, with the black marks, the confetti, etc.

Will Potatoes Continue to Advance in Price.

Users of the staple potato are won-dering what the price of potatoes will be when the time comes to store them for winter use. The Pennsylvania crop is short, 780,000 bushels. There are some States that can show an increase but on the whole there is a shortage above the average yield, but 8 per cent. above the 1925 crop.

Comparing last year's prices and the price later this year it wouldn't Fasten fat raisins to a yard-long passes a saucer to the guest, asking him to touth it with the forefinger as $2.25, and more in 1927.

Say Good-bye, Then Go.

Just how much is wasted by the practice of starting the engine and then beginning a conversation is difficult to calculate, but it certainly represents a tremendous total of lost gasoline. The book of etiquette claims that when a guest has reached the point of holding the knob of the door handle he ought to make the farewell as brief as possible and be on his way. In motoring it's not only a matter of etiquette but a saving of gas to make au revoir and cranking simultaneous.

-The dentist had just been to call on one of his clients to try and collect a bill for a full set of false teeth he had made for him about a year before.
"Did he pay you?" asked his wife.
"Pay me!" echoed the denist scornfully. "Not only did he refuse to pay me, he actually had the effrontery to gnash at me-with my own teeth!
