Interesting Information Relative to State Building at Harrisburg.

If all of the capitol buildings at Harrisburg were removed except the dome, that portion of the building would continue unimpaired in strength. It stands independently on its own footing. It belongs to that class of dome that rises completely clear of the building which it adorns. tablespoons of powdered sugar and a It is not imbedded for the greater part of its height in the masonry of the edifice itself. The dome at Harrisburg, except for the reduction due to the thickness of its double sheathing, for there is a shell within a shell and a space between, measures the same inside and out.

The total weight of the dome is 52-000,000 pounds. A bed of slate rock is the support of this enormous downward pressure. The foundations of the four piers were set into this slate rock a distance of six and one-half feet. The pressure was calculated for 7,000 pounds to the square foot, and the breadth of the piers is twenty-nine feet, three inches. In each of these four masses of bricks two iron col-umns are imbedded, braced together with bars. As the piers ascend and the pressure on them is reduced, their breadth diminishes until on the leve of the Entresol Floor it is twelve fee six inches. Construction of these piers required 7,000,000 bricks, and an additional 8,000,000 are used in the superstructure.

Concerning the superstructure Chas. H. Caffin, gives the following description:

"As the latter nears the line where Presently, far to the west, the call cream of tarter and 1/2 teaspoon of the masonry construction ceases, steel came faintly forth again and grew in soda. Inventive Genius Lacking in Sons of Ford, Edison.

Successors of their own blood are stepping into the shoes of Thomas A. Edison and Henry Ford as the age-enforced retirement of these two outstanding American mechanical wizards draw near. But-twin whim of destiny-from the blood streams that link fathers and sons the corpuscles of genius are lacking.

In these sons, Edsel Ford and Chas. Edison, executives of the "American business man" type are inheriting con-trol of the huge Ford and Edison industrial concerns.

When the curtain of inactivity falls on the founders of these concerns it will fall simultaneously on the inventive instinct-the flair for doing new things, in a new way-that made these founders rich and famous.

Charles Edison is the second of the sons to spring into prominence. He became president of an assortment of industries worth upward of $100,000-000 and employing some 45,000 work-

"I'm a business man and not an inventor," young Edison candidly says. At 36 he is affable, college-bred and a lover of the arts. He makes a hob-by of writing and thinks a finished education a fine thing for a youth who is starting out to make his own way. The elder Edison cares nothing for folks had a jolly good time in quaint the arts, never had a college training and is very dubious about higher education's benefits.
