Is There an African in the Woodpile?

The Watchman was scarcely off the press last Friday, broadcasting its suggestion that some litigation, at least, in the Centre County Bank case, might be saved if the receivers of the banking company were to offer to make distribution of the funds in Mr. Walker's hands without charge therefor, when the receivers went to Mr. Walker and offered to do so.

We understand that he did not accept their proposal so there is nothing left for them to do but carry on with their petition to the Federal court to have Mr. Walker show cause why he should not turn the funds over to them for distribution to the creditors.

They contend that they are responsible to the creditors of the bank for all of its assets. The funds in Mr. Walker's possession are presumably assets of the bank, but in order to save the creditors what might have been a dual fee for distributing them he proceeded to prepare to distribute them directly. At least that was the general supposition as to his motive.

It would appear that there must be something more back of it than the desire to save an extra commission on the amount, for now that the receivers have declared their willingness to do the work without charge and thereby end litigation that they deem necessary to their own protection, Mr. Walker's refusal to co-operate must certainly be for other reasons than were generally supposed.

What are they? The proposal made to him by the receivers was as follows:

> Bellefonte, Penna.. January 20th, 1927.

Ivan Walker, Esq., Trustee in Bankruptcy of the Estate of Mary C. Harris, Bellefonte, Penna.

Dear Mr. Walker:-While we the undersigned, Receivers of the Centre County Banking tery. Company appointed by the Court of Common Pleas of Centre County, are convinced that as the lawfully appointed Trustees of the bank creditors we are entitled to receive and distribute all the assets and receive a commission for so doing; we do recognize that there is merit in your argument that an additional expense would be thus incurred. We further realize that the litigation just started to determine our right may be protracted for a considerable period of time and necessarily create considerable cost, expenses and fees that will eventually largely come out of the creditors themselves who have waited so long for some distri-

Harris Estate ready for distribution we will agree promptly to distribute the same amongst the bank creditors together with the balances distribute the said balance to be received from you as Trustee without any deduction or charge for commissions, attorney's fees or incidental ex-
