296 Men Escape Death in Terrific Mine Blast.

Just 296 men out of a total of 300 escaped death and serious injury in a terrific explosion in the mines of the Pennsylvania Coal and Coke company, at Ehrenfeld, Cambria county, at noon on Tuesday, and only four deaths resulted.

The explosion ripped through mine No. 3 of the Pennsylvania Coal and Coke company, shortly after noon, when the entire day shift was at work in the headings leading from the main drift. The force of the blast was felt 10 miles away, rocking this mining village of 200 houses as if it were the centre of an earthquake.

Hundreds of miners and members of the families of the men in the workings rushed to the mine mouth. They held little hope for their fellow workers and loved ones, believing that a blast of such force would surely claim the life of every man in the underground tunnels.

As they watched rescuers trying to push their way into the main incline, they saw a miner, besmirched with coal dust, walk erect from a nearby undamaged entry. And still others followed. The watchers at last realized these were survivors, stepping from what was believed to have been their tomb. A shout of joy went up as wives and children of the survivors pushed forward. Later, through two other entries the air shafts, came other survivors. Mine officials, checking off the living, finally found all accounted for except four.

Mining men at the scene marveled at the speed with which rescue workers were gathered. The United States bureau of mines rescue car "Holmes" with a trained crew was rushed in from Derry, Pa. Doctors, nurses, ambulances and undertakers came from Johnstown and other points in Cambria.

Of the three hundred survivors, only six needed aid to get from the mine, these were affected by after damp but recovered quickly.

Damage within the mine was not great, company officials said and it will be shut down only for a few days.
