FARM NOTES.

—Give the garden shallow cultivation often enough to keep the weeds down and the soil loose.
—Replant garden space with succession crops as soon as it is made available by the harvesting of early vegetables.
—Start cutting the grass before it gets too long. Clip it often during the heavy growing period. Short clippings will never have to be raked up.
—Milk utensils should be sterilized. This not only kills bacteria and makes utensils sweet and wholesome but they also dry quickly, which prevents rusting.
—During the spring months dairy cattle should be curried daily. This will help in removing the old hair and will keep the hide in a good healthy condition.
—Have you provided the proper equipment and materials needed for insect and disease control? Do not wait until the pests begin their destructive work to obtain the fighting apparatus.
—Did you plant trees along streets, on school grounds, on eroded lands, or in open spaces in the woods during American Forest Week? If not, you may still do this important piece of service for mankind.
—Dairy cattle, cows or young stock, should not be turned out to pasture until the ground is settled and the grass well-started. Better pastures all summer and much more feed all summer will be realized from later starting.
—Fires have done more damage to forests than all other agencies combined. The menace can be stopped by the exercise of reasonable care on the part of those who use or travel through the woodlands. Prevent forest fires. It pays!
—Fire is the great enemy of the forest. It injures or destroys timber, kills the young trees, burns the plant food in the forest floor, causes the soil to wash, dries up the streams, runs out the game, and ruins the forest camping places.
—Straw is a material which is very satisfactory for litter in the poultry house. It must not be musty or moldy. When used in the brooder house, it should always be cut in short lengths, about two inches long. Oat, rye, or wheat straw may be used.
—Dairy cows should not be turned on pasture too early, say Pennsylvania State College dairy specialists. Give the grass a chance to get started and it will make much better pasture later. Early pasturing may impair the health and production of the cows, also.
—When one must buy a milk product, it will be worth while to consider dried milk, either skim or buttermilk. One of these products can be mixed with the mash and is not so likely to attract flies as is liquid milk. Keeping containers clean is one of the poultrymen's problems.
—Most bankers are much more willing to lend money on favorable terms to the farmer who can furnish a clean-cut statement of his net worth than to the farmer who never takes an inventory and who never keeps records which are evidences of his business efficiency.
—Last week, April 24 to 30, was American Forest week. We pay tribute to the trees which help to make our homes, give fuel to keep us warm, contribute the paper for our magazines, books, and newspapers, and provide many other things necessary in our daily lives. From babyhood to old age we need timber and wood.
—When the pigs are about two weeks old they will begin to crack some corn. Give them some to nibble on. Also let them share some of the brood sow's slop and grain as soon as possible. Putting the little pigs on full feed at the earliest opportunity permits them to grow and develop rapidly. Then they will not miss the sow at the weaning time.
—America's $10,000,000 national caterpillar, the European corn borer, is finding western Pennsylvania an unsafe place to live and rear its progeny. Farmers in the clean-up area have declared a relentless war on the foreign invader. Every fair day is being used advantageously in plowing under or burning all corn stalks, stubble, cobs and trash. State College Agricultural extension workers throughout the area are very optimistic about the results. They have carried on an extensive educational campaign which has reached every corn grower in the eight counties.
The European corn borer knows he is in a fight.
—While corn is the preferred host of the European corn borer in America and sustains more serious injury than any other plant attacked, a number of field crops, weeds, and flowering plants are also susceptible, Pennsylvania State College agricultural crop specialists point out. No severe economic injury to plants other than corn has occurred, and many of them serve primarily as shelter plants, rather than as the food plants; but the proximity of any of the more susceptible is a menace to corn in areas under control, since adult moths breeding in them may deposit their eggs on near-by corn.
In New England a total of 224 species has been recorded as hosts of the corn borer. Not more than 38 of these are known to constitute real food plants for the insect. Among the plants subjected to quarantine in the east by the Federal Horticultural board, either because of susceptibility or the likelihood of their proving carriers, are: Corn and broom-corn, including all parts of the stalk, all sorghum, sudan grass, celery, green beans in the pod, beets with top, rhubarb, chrysanthemum, aster, cosmos, zinnia, hollyhock, gladiolus, dahlia, and oat and rye straw.
Following the adoption of control measures and the enforcement of these quarantine regulations in New England during the past three years, there has been a noteworthy reduction in infestation of most of the vegetables and flowers on the foregoing list.

The Mississippi Floods

This appalling disaster has again proved that the Red Cross is the one great organization that can give immediate relief. Thousands of small farmers have lost their all. Everything they need to sustain life must be furnished at once. Belleville has already contributed thirteen hundred ($1,376.00) of the two thousand ($2,000.00) dollars that the district is asked to give.
