

A DISPLEASED PREDICTION.

A Mont Clare Prophet Says It's to be Cold and Wet.

A cold, wet spring is forecast by George Brown, 77, of Mont Clare, who for years has been regarded in his Montgomery county community as a weather prophet of remarkable accuracy. Mr. Brown bases his conclusion on his "instruments," the signs of nature.

A cool spring, he says, is indicated by the activity of moles in burrowing into the ground and by other signs such as the return southward of wild geese. April, he says, will be unusually wet, and May will continue to be cool, but June will be one of the warmest months of the year.

Mr. Brown maintains he has made a higher percentage of forecasts that were fulfilled lately than George S. Bliss, United States forecaster at Philadelphia. He has predicted each heavy snowfall this winter.

Officials at the Weather Bureau smiled at George Brown's forecast of a cool spring. "No one can say what the weather will be that far ahead," they said. "An excess of 129 degrees of temperature has been built up this year, while there is a deficiency of 1.78 of rainfall. Therefore, the theory of probabilities would lead one to believe that the spring would be cool and wet to even matters up. But that doesn't hold. You can't tell. About all we know is that we will always have some kind of weather. Our forecasts prove correct 85 per cent of the time."

"WINGS" NOW SHOWING IN PITTSBURGH.

"Wings," the War in the Air, is Running at the Nixon, in Pittsburgh.

The movie of Thrills. The war in the air has never been so strikingly set upon the screen as in "Wings," now playing to such tremendous business at the Nixon theatre, Pittsburgh. Not only American squadrons are seen among the clouds but the German flying circus is in evidence, as is a gigantic Gotha bomber that goes soaring down the skies with two pursuit planes, tiny in comparison, roaring along at its flanks.

Not alone crystal clear photography but a magnificent screen has been used to intensify the spectacle of combat high above the lines, and for once there are stage "effects" that do not fail their purpose in suggesting purring motors and the snarling whine of a coming shell. Nor is the aerial photography in any sense "studio stuff." "Dog fights," day patrols whirling into the pale light of dawn, planes shot down in a whistling streak of flame are so clearly shown they seem almost inside the theatre.

Walter Wellman, the director, has used his cameras cannily in these sequences, angle shots that might be the despair of any German, are inserted with telling effect; at times, it seems, the camera went aloft on a plane, at other times, it followed down the field a scout patrol just swaying off the ground.

Among other scenes which Wellman's cameras have brilliantly caught are hilarious incidents at the "Folies Bergeres," with folk of all nations busily forgetting the war and its work. On the other hand, there are panoramic and breath-snatching glimpses of an army moving to the front. "Men! Men! Guns! Guns!" as Laurence Stallings would have put it.

The handling of the human element of the film is unusually good in its little incidents, a German ace scoring to shoot down a disarmed opponent, a student flyer nibbling a bit of chocolate as he goes gaily to his last fight, a soldier stiff and dead, a cigarette still smoking at his lips as a shell goes by.

Keep Moulding in Place.

On many makes of cars, the running board is a thin metal strip which is susceptible to looseness. In winter, particularly, it suffers from the practice of many car owners of scraping their shoes on it before entering the car. If the moulding shows signs of breaking loose, the motorist probably will find reattachment but a moment's task. Allowing it to go unrepaired will result in breakage with decidedly bad effect upon the appearance of the car.

Thrilling Inside Stories of World War Submarine Battles.

Lowell Thomas has written a fascinating chronicle of the exploits of commanders of submarines during the World War. These recitals emphasize the importance of the submarine in warfare, particularly at this time when effort is being made to abolish all submarines.

Mr. Thomas gathered these thrilling reminiscences of war-time adventure through personal contact with U-boat sailors at the close of the war. They are most compellingly interesting reading of adventures that will thrill you as you read them.

This most important series starts in the Sunday New York American with the issue of April 15th, 1928, and continues each week over a considerable period of time.
