MAKING NEW DRINK FOR THIRSTY PUBLIC.

Bootleggers Now Turn to Jam and Water as 'Foreign Wine, Reaping Greater Profit and Keeping Within Prohibition Statute.

Bootleggers fattening on prohibition "within the law" and far more profitably than if they violated the Volstead act is the latest amazing development in connection with America's illicit thirst.

Astute bootleggers are quitting the hard hootch traffic and turning to unsophisticated unfermented grapejuice in order to "get the big money" easier, quicker and infinitely safer. The new technique for separating those whose birthrate, according to Barnum, is one every minute from their easy money is the imported "wine" grapeuice racket.

This ingenious scheme is simplicity itself. It almost sells itself. It is easy to start and is easily worked, according to the most modern highpressure American methods, with constantly changing crews of salesmen combing the field. And even leading citizens have fallen for their misleadng statements.

imum order is $50 for a 10-gallon cause too many complaints keg. A hint of the huge net profits pour in to the authorities. the salesmen are paid a commission of $32 on a $50 order.

The big selling point is that the purchaser is really obtaining choice foreign vintage wines dirt cheap. The imported grape juice conforms to all Federal and State laws as far as alcoholic content goes, when delivered. But it will automatically ferment and juice into wine. The "catch" is the word "imported." into the United States in bulk and no grapejuice is being imported in bulk.

mostly from Italy.
This imported "grape jam" or grape syrup is a conserve of the hardest consistency, containing about 90 per cent sugar and the balance socalled grape and other concoctions. It comes in two varieties, red and ed "genuine" burgundy, sherry or to-kay. All "vintages" taste alike, for they all come out of the same can. The fast working salesman usually approaches a business man who has either forgotten what vintage wines taste like or who never drank in his

"How would you like to have some genuine burgundy, etc?" is apt to be his opener, rattling on in an impreshis opener, ratting on in sive list of seductive names.

In order to clinch the sale, the salesman carries some kind of a sample, and salesman carries some kind of a sample salesman carries some kind of a sample salesman carries salesman c good samples are, as a rule, obtained from sacramental wine stores or illicit sources and fortified with additional alcohol to induce sales.

No repeat orders result, and no repeat business is expected in the "imported" racket. The big idea is change their trade name at frequent intervals. One company changed it five times within one year to induce sales of "imported" wine grapejuice. It is an interesting fact that the "imported" racket is worked chiefly

And transportation is promised.

The men applying for these jobs are generally stranded and broke. And this is the class deliberately sought. They are given a railroad ticket stamped "To Order," which prevents a refund being obtained for

They are told to go to a hotel, register and go right out and solicit business, and that the demand for their product is so great that they can easly make two or three sales a day.

The salesman operating on a shoestring is very apt to find when he starts out soliciting that this town has been worked over and over again under different names. He realizes that he is up against it. But he is forced to make a sale in order to pay his hotel bill and transportation.

Leading citizens, prominent business men, bankers, professional men, etc., frequently give orders to this type of "wine" salesman out of sympathy. But they are not always suc-cessful in landing a lifesaver, as many up-State hotels know, to their sor-

Often those who tried to work the "imported" wine grape juice racket have to beg or steal a ride back to town. As a result, one crew is always traveling to the job and one coming back while one is operating on

The typical sales talk runs some thing like this: "I represent the — company, the largest of its kind in the world, which is importing wine grapes from Europe and pressing and blending them.

"We can ship you a keg of grape juice direct from Europe," etc. When the keg arrives it generally proves to be paraffin-lined and made by a Jersey City cooperage company, the paraffin lining being to prevent leakage, in lieu of the more costly non-leakable kegs.

Or the salesman says: "I represent a large company which can ship you fine, genuine imported wine. We can ship you a keg of wine grape juice from Italy direct and de-livered to your home. This is of non-alcoholic content when it arrives. But if you knock the bung out and leave it stand for three weeks it will give you pre-war wine." If the salesman is not successful, and when he realizes he has been sent out on a dead horse proposition, he is apt to go to extremes in his desperation and try something like this: "I represent a large foreign wine company. We are unloading a few hundred kegs of real pre-war Italian wine. Here's a sample. All it costs is $50 for a 10-gallon keg."

As a rule he collects his money in advance. And on arrival it proves to be grape juice made from grape conserve by adding water in a paraffinlined keg from Jersey City. There are six companies operating the "imported" wine grape juice rack-et out of New York, and five of them

The wholesale price of the one-gallon can of "jam" is less than $2. Construct Hot-bed for Plant Growing.

Many people prefer to grow their early vegetables and flower plants for the home garden instead of purwhite.

Ten-gallon kegs of New York City water added to cheap imported grape jam have high sounding vintage names conferred upon them on the salesman's order blanks, and in the sales talk the old familiar names are freely drawn upon.

The high sugar content does cause fermentation automatically to set in after delivery and an appreciable alcoholic content develops as promised. But the result is far from the expected "genuine" burgundy, sherry or topurchased from any manufacturer of greenhouse material.

A southern exposure with maximum sunlight is best for the hotbed, which should be protected from the northwest winds. The north wall or side should be at least twelve to eight teen inches in height and the south side six to twelve inches high. Use one and a half to two-inch boards or planks. This gives the hotbed a six-inch drop or exposure to the south. The manure pit is usually the same size as the hotbed. The depth of the pit or excavation may vary from eighteen to twenty-four inches, depending upon the length of time artificial heat is needed.

Line the sides and bottom of the pit with old boards as insulation to conserve as much heat from the ma-"imported" racket. The big idea is a quick one-time clean up. Some of these concerns have found it wise to change their trade name at frequent intervals. "imported" racket is worked chiefly outside of the metropolitan area. And the big territory is between 100 and 250 miles from New York City.

Some of these concerns advertise almost daily, but not Sundays, for salesmen. The reason they do not advertise on Sundays is that they do not want the higher type that reads and answers Sunday ads. Men around the age of 35 are preferred. Big money in the form of immediate commissions is the prospect held out.
