

Harry Harding is planning to leave Bellefonte on March 17. Having reached his sixty-sixth year and being a confirmed bachelor he says "there is no social life here for me so I am going to Ft. Laramie, Wyoming, to have a good time on the ranch of a friend for ten years. Then I'll be so old I won't care what happens." Thus we are to lose the colored Beau Brummell of the town.

SNOW SHOE AS IT USED TO BE.

Commenting on the bag of furbearing animals caught last month in the Snow Shoe region by trapper Reese Rhodes, of Altoona, Henry W. Shoemaker, in the Altoona Tribune, says:

Two specimens on exhibition were obtained in the vicinity of Snow Shoe, Centre county, on that vast bleak upland that sends the shivers through winter travelers who are forced to travel that way when the "Canadian breeze" blows out of the north. Less than three score years ago the Snow Shoe region was one of the great primeval wildernesses of Central Pennsylvania. It was shortly after that, about 1862, that the "switchback" railroad was built from Bellefonte to bring out the coal and open up the great pineries.

It was then that John Uzzle, a Welshman and Civil war veteran, opened his hotel at Snow Shoe, which for nearly a half century was the favorite headquarters for lumbermen, trout fishermen, prospectors, hunters and trappers. Aaron Hall, of Unionville, Centre county, known in his earlier days as "the lion hunter of Juniata," was much in evidence there, bringing to the hotel the carcasses of many panthers, just as trapper Rhodes displayed his wildcats. John Gunsallus, hardy descendant of the Spanish pioneers, was also a mighty hunter and trapper of the Snow Shoe region, his specialty being wolves. John Askey was probably the greatest nimrod of them all, if the number of panthers and wolves which he captured is the standard.

Today it is refreshing to weary city dwellers to feel that there is a "delectable mountain" near at hand, where wild life lingers, and in the snow may be seen the tracks of fox, wildcat and other interesting economically and commercially valuable creatures.

Aircraft Radio Progressing.

In his annual report submitted to the Department of Commerce Clarence M. Young director of aeronautics, states that "radio communication for aircraft along the transcontinental route is to be installed in the near future at a number of fields across the country, which will include Bellefonte. This service has already been partially available at Hadley field, N. J., and at the Bureau of Standards experimental station at Bellefonte for several months, and air-transport companies are installing equipment on their planes to receive direct weather reports, landing instructions and other information."

Clarence W. Zerby and Russell A. Sweetwood, both of Spring Mills, were arrested on Monday, by county detective Leo Boden, on the charge of committing a number of petty robberies throughout lower Pennsylvania. They were each held in three hundred dollars bail for their appearance at court.

According to Auditor General Edward Martin, gasoline dealers throughout the State are delinquent in their payments of gas tax into the State treasury over a million and a half dollars, and of this amount Centre county dealers are short $2,795.
