MANY SEEDLINGS PLANTED IN STATE.

Figures compiled by the Pennsylvania Department of Forests and Waters show that 9,882,310 forest trees from the State forest nurseries were set out by 2,254 planters in all parts of the Commonwealth in 1928. Plantations established during the year average 33 to the county and number of trees supplied each planter was on the average, 4,400. Every county is represented.

Berks county led the field both in number of trees planted and plantations established, with 579,541 trees ity of victims. and 124 planters. Elk county was second in place with 575,025 trees and 567,921 trees and 66 planters.

In the number of individual plantings, York and Westmoreland counties ranked second and third, with 91 and 82 planters, respectively. Elk county led in the size of the average planting with 14,375 trees per planter. In Lackawanna county the average planter set out 12.643 trees and in Cambria county 11,233

The three counties which reflected leadership in tree planting last year in Pennsylvania illustrate significantly the diversity of interest which is being shown in Pennsylvania's reforestation program, Department officials said. Berks county, essentially agri-cultural, reflects the interest of the farmers, who have been active in tree planting and the improvement of their woodlots ever since trees for reforestation have been supplied by the Department. Lackawanna county is in the heart of the anthracite region where the acute shortage of sons produced by the infecting ortimber for the mining industry has ganism. that if all plantings had equalled the a glassful of water every half hour individual county, 32,400,000 trees would have been planted, and nearly 40,000,000 trees would have been set out if other counties had matched the combined efforts of Berks county planters.

Pneumonia is an infection. It is produced by various organisms, some others. The disease is undoubtedly communicable through contact. On this account, contact of elderly people and children with persons suffering from the disease should be carefully avoided.

It is not the purpose of this article to describe pneumonia or to outline a plan of treatment of the disease since every case of pneumonia requires the personal attention of a competent physician. It is the writer's conviction that the lives of many of those who die from this disease might be saved if more effective measures of treatment were employed, and the purpose of this article is simply to call attention to some of the measures known to have great life-saving value in these cases and which are by no means always made use of.

When the patient's temperature is high and the skin hot and dry the wet sheet pack affords wonderful relief and exercises a controlling effect over the disease and produces beneficial effects which are often little short of marvelous. If the patient's skin surface is cold, even though the temperature may be high, a hot blanket pack should be given instead of a wet sheet pack.
