The First Concern.

An effective treatment for ivy poisoning is lead acetate or sugar of lead dissolved in 50 to 75 per cent grade alcohol.

At this time of year when outdoor sports are of general interest, a note of warning needs to be sounded to those of middle age or over.

The business man who is fat and forty, or at least forty, suddenly develops a logical enthusiasm for tennis, golf and baseball at this outdoor season.

For instance, at a recent opening of some new tennis courts a father who happened to weigh 175 pounds and was forty-seven years old, boastfully took his racket in hand to lick the kid who was twenty and a college tennis flash.

Buckhorn is a weed found abundantly in all parts of the State. It injures lawns, meadows, and pastures.

Close mowing of the lawn during hot, dry weather is inadvisable, for a fair length of growth is needed to shade the roots and prevent their being scorched.

Friday of this week is Farmers' Field Day at State College. Give yourself a treat by going to your college for a day.

Chicks fed unlimited amounts of a complete ration are likely to be in good flesh when ready to be sold as broilers.

Abundant pasture of a sort that is tender and remains green for a long period is the most economical basis for the raising of geese.

Many poultryman who are wanting a better market for their poultry products would find better profits in a direct to the consumer trade.

There are certain general symptoms. Among them are sweating of the head, paleness of the skin, weakness, restlessness and much crying.

Of course the muscles are soft and flabby. They always are in general debility from any cause. But in rickets the weakness of the muscles may be so pronounced that the baby can't sit up and is very late in attempting to walk.

Because of the muscle weakness, the abdominal walls gives way. In consequence there is "pot belly."

The poor little legs cannot support themselves. There is "knock-knees." The child is too frail to stand. The bones are so soft they bend.

"Pigeon breast" and "bending" of the ribs are other symptoms. Early decay of the baby teeth is another sign of the disease.

In seeking the cause for rickets we go at once to errors in feeding and to lack of sunlight. Unless the food given a baby is rich in lime, phosphorus and the vitamins there is sure to be trouble.

FARM NOTES.

Thousands will attend the annual Farmers' Field Day on June 20 and 21 at the Pennsylvania State College.

Climbing vines need training and careful attention every few days in their early stages. This is particularly important with permanent hardy types.

Good pasture for growing pigs, brood sows, and all classes of swine is so valuable that it often makes the difference between profit and loss in the hog business.

Lice and mites are poultry pests which can be controlled effectively. Use nicotine sulphate for lice and cresote or carbolineum for mites. Apply the chemicals on the roosts.

Dairymen find feeding grain to cows on pasture is absolutely essential for high milk production. They supplement the pasture with good quality hay, summer silage, or molasses crops, in addition to a grain mixture.

A simple outdoor shelter for chicks will relieve crowded conditions in the brooder house. It will also provide ample ventilation and cool roosting quarters during the summer months. A sanitary range shelter should be provided.

One of the best methods of controlling Canada thistle in fields is to starve out the plants by keeping green shoots cut back. If in a corn field rowed both ways, frequent cultivation with knives or sweeps instead of shovels will keep the thistles down.

Flies are a serious pest around the stable and milkhouse. Screened windows and darkened stables will help protect the cattle. Windows and doors to the milkhouse should be screened also.

Spraying is an essential practice in successful potato culture. Farmers who applied timely and thorough sprays last year grew their crops at the lowest cost per bushel.

Close mowing of the lawn during hot, dry weather is inadvisable, for a fair length of growth is needed to shade the roots and prevent their being scorched.

THE BIG WINNER.

They had watched the game hour after hour for the last four days. Tresholm's eyes followed the whirling of the ball.

"Nineteen," he announced. "I should never have thought of nineteen. What are you for, Bartoldi? Maximums on seven, fourteen, twenty-nine, I suppose?"

Lena's hand stole through the young man's arm. "I may stand by you?" she whispered. "I do not disturb?"

Tresholm was watching his companion closely. Bartoldi's attitude was that of a genuine spectator—if anything a trifle bored. He held a packet of notes in his hand, but he was whispering to Lena and they both laughed.

"What a silly game!" he exclaimed suddenly. "I say," he added, turning to Tresholm, "do you mind if we go on up to the Carlton? You and I have to play against those fellows at tennis tomorrow at half past ten, so we ought not to be too late."

The little procession passed down the stairs, Lena's arm through her fiancé's, the princess' head close to Tresholm's.

"But you are a magician, dear friend," she murmured. Later in the evening they found themselves alone for a few minutes.

"Ever since I knew you, dear Andrew," she said, "you've been helping people out of trouble. There was your second secretary who had the affair with Signor Cortoni's wife. And then—"

"Don't make me out too much of a busy-body," he begged. "Dear Margherita—you permit?"

"Then, Margherita," he went on, "believe me, this little episode has given me real pleasure. It is a hobby of mine to speculate upon human nature and its byways of which gambling is one. I figured to myself that, after the first agony of watching a game of chance when one was hopelessly without the means of joining in, the flatness of it would begin to depress. That was my theory."

"Afternoon after afternoon, night after night, we have watched that stupid mechanical toy, and every time the young man became more bored. At first he suffered, but only for a short time. Since then, I think he has felt all the surfeit of the cigarette-smoking youth set to watch over a tobaccoist's shop and given carte blanche. By comparison, the tennis we arranged for him, the golf, the companionship of your delightful Lena gained every hour in value. Tonight I am certain he was honest. The game did not attract him. The poison had gone. I am proud of my patient."

"And you, the wonderful physician!" she murmured. "Is there no one who can pay your fee?"

Then the lights went down; strange shadows crept through the place. The music which begun like the rustling of leaves, the sighing of a south wind, stole into form. Without a word they rose.

"The last thing the true physician thinks of is his fee," Tresholm confided.

Her lips almost brushed his in that subdued light. "So the patient has to offer," she whispered.—Hearst's International Cosmopolitan.

METHODISTS WILL PAY DEBT ON THREE HOMES.

Representatives of the Central Pennsylvania conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which operates in twenty-six counties and has a membership beyond 100,000, have decided to put on an intensive drive to pay the debts on the properties of the Methodist Home for Children, near Mechanicsburg, the Methodist Home for the Aged, at Tyrone, and the Wesley Foundation at State College.

On the farm near Mechanicsburg, of 184 acres fully equipped for farm operations, are six massive stone buildings for the activities of the Home for Children, conducted not on institutional lines, but under home customs, forms and relations. When Pennsylvania sought the best service plant for care of children it selected for its display at the Philadelphia Sesqui-Centennial the Home operated by the Methodists. The property debt is $110,000.

The Home at Tyrone has 100 guests. It is thoroughly equipped and is the most economically managed of all the forty-six Homes for Aged in the world, under the auspices of Methodists. Its debt is $80,000. For Wesley Foundation with its fine annex for the student life of State College, the debt need is $10,000.

The Rev. H. C. Burkholder, of Harrisburg, is field secretary; W. G. Murtorff, of State College, office manager, and the Rev. B. H. Hart, of Hollidaysburg, is the treasurer of this campaign. The board of philanthropies, composed of nineteen representatives of three benevolences mentioned and the trustees and Home Missionary Society, together with the four district superintendents, will have general direction of this campaign, which has aroused already thoughtful laymen of the church. The campaign will run from October 20 to December 4.
