

HIGHEST POINT IN STATE IS 3222 FEET.

In a statement issued today by Dr. George H. Ashley, State Geologist in the Pennsylvania Department of Internal Affairs, the geologist tells something about Pennsylvania's high spots and how they are measured.

As a rule mountain climbers are more interested in the height and steepness of mountains measured from their bases than they are in the height above sea level. Thus the highest point in the State is 3222 feet above tide. On the ground this is only a 150-foot knob that rises above the general upland on the top of Negro Mountain in Somerset county, measured to the nearest large stream—Casselman River, four miles away, the height of this mountain is only 620 feet, which is exceeded by many other mountains of Pennsylvania.

The figures given beyond were measured from the topographical maps and are not complete or final, as topographic mapping in Pennsylvania has not been finished.

First honors go to Big Mountain, part of Tuscarora Mountain, 2 1/2 miles north of the Lincoln Highway, which at 2,440 feet above tide is 1820 feet above the West Branch of Conococheague Creek 1 1/2 miles away. A lone second is near Eagles Mere in Sullivan county where North Mountain Tower on North Mountain is 598 feet above tide, while Muncy Creek 2.3 miles off is 798 feet, a difference of 1,800 feet. Close behind the leaders are a bunch of hills over 750 feet high. Thus Jacks Mountain 1 3/4 miles north of Juniata River is 2340 feet above tide, 1770 feet above the river which is only 570 feet above tide. Wills Mountain near Vills Creek station is 2720 feet above tide or 1760 feet above Little Wills Creek at 960 feet. Laurel Hill south of Younghighery River is 2900 feet above tide or 1750 feet above the river at 1250 feet only 1.4 miles to the northwest. These are among the most outstanding climbs considering horizontal distance as well as height. To realize what these heights mean it is well to recall some other well known elevations—well known because on main lines of travel. For example: 1,800 feet is more than double the height of the mountains north of Harrisburg. The river at the top is 520 feet above tide and the top of the mountain is 1,200 feet on the east side and 1,120 feet on the west side of the river, a difference of 80 feet. Second Mountain gap south of Dauphin is a little deeper, the top of the mountain 4 1/2 miles from the river being 1320 feet, giving a depth to the gorge of 1,000 feet. Delaware Water Gap is 200 feet deep, the river being 285 feet above tide and the mountain top of a mile away 1,480 feet on the west and 1,520 feet on the east. Onemaugh Gap through Laurel ridge west of Johnstown is 1,490 feet deep, the river being at 1,230 feet and the mountain top on the west side is 2,720 feet high. Mann's Narrows on the William Penn Highway above Lewistown is 1,220 feet deep, the mountain tops at 1,800 feet above tide are that high above Shacoquillas Creek which is 580 feet above tide, 4 of a mile distant. Allegheny River runs through a gorge in most of its course in Pennsylvania, but the hills are only 600 to 700 feet above the river and commonly less. At Pittsburgh the very deep bluff just above Brilliant cut-off is 530 feet high. Johnstown has an inclined plane that is 500 feet high. The reservoir on the hill nearby is about 610 feet above Stony Creek. The deep gorge of Sugar Run on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad approaching Horseshoe Curve from the west is just 900 feet deep at its deepest point, the stream having an elevation of 480 feet and the mountain top of 480 feet. The railroad at the same point is 1,850 feet above tide or less than half way up the flank of the mountain. Near the toe of the Horseshoe Curve itself there is a difference of elevation of 1,040 feet from the low reservoir to the hill at the north.

CAVELL BETRAYER IN LIVING DEATH.

Spurned even by the dregs of society among whom he is doomed to spend the rest of his life, George Quien, who betrayed Edith Cavell, the heroic English war nurse, into the hands of the Germans to be shot as a spy during the World War, is living a terrible life on Devil's island, the French penal colony in South America.

Not a man will speak a word to Quien.

Quien still maintains that he is innocent of the charge which doomed him to life imprisonment, but his lawyers long ago gave up their efforts to obtain him a new trial. His parents have died of shame in Paris, and his name dare not be spoken among those who live in the village where he once was a well liked neighbor.

Quien has no work to do, for the simple reason that other convicts will suffer punishment rather than associate with him. The guards whose duty it is to carry him his food leave their trays at the door of his lonely hut and hasten away lest he address a single word to them.

Many times the authorities have frustrated plots to kill Quien, for they dare not permit him to be killed in spite of their hatred for him. It is significant, however, that the men who have been caught plotting to kill Quien never have been punished.

Quien, who at the beginning of his imprisonment was a strong, healthy man, today has wasted away until he is a mere skeleton.

ONE-EYED CARS MENACE LIVES SAYS AUTO CLUB

Glaring headlights again loom as breeder of automobile accidents according to the Keystone Automobile Club, which in a bulletin recently directed attention of motorists to this menace and urged them to take proper measures for their own safety and that of other users of the highway.

"Dazzling, blinding lights are entirely unnecessary," says the bulletin. With thousands of official adjusting stations located throughout the State, these adjustments are made at a minimal cost, there is no excuse whatever for motorists to continue light driving lights that are out of focus.

"Many fatal accidents have been caused by cars leaving the highway because their drivers were blinded by approaching headlights and, similarly, many head-on collisions have occurred with injury to the occupants of the colliding machines.

"It is well, also, for drivers to reflect on the hazard of driving with only one headlight. 'One-eyed cars' are high in the tabulation of accident causes. The menace of this practice is so apparent that we cannot conceive of any driver wilfully peering along the highway with but one light functioning. Yet the large number of such cars to be seen on an evening's drive forces observers to the conclusion that the condition can exist without the knowledge of motorists.

"With the summer season under way, motorists will do well to look to their lighting and other equipment. The accident toll is to be kept within bounds.
