

THE GREEN "Y" HUT TO GO FROM PENN STATE CAMPUS.

One of the last outward reminders of the World War will disappear from the campus of the Pennsylvania State College in the razing this month of the green and white "Y" Hut, similar to hundreds erected in various military training camps. Student religious activities are to center in the rebuilt main building.

Penn State's part in the war has been commemorated in bronze plaques being placed in the lounge of Old Main recording the names of the 73 students and alumni who were lost during the conflict. Old Main is one of the twelve buildings rebuilt or erected in the program of replacements at the college which will be commemorated at the 75th college charter anniversary, October 23, 24, and 25.
