

FIND MEAT IS BEST DIGESTED BY DOGS

CANINE ANATOMY MORE LIKE HUMAN'S THAN ANY OF FARM ANIMALS.

If you saw a man and his dog walking down the street, you would not be likely to confuse one with the other.

The striking similarity in the anatomy of man and dog is well shown in the accompanying illustration prepared by the Foundation.

Proper feeding is the keynote of successful dog keeping. If man may be said to thrive best on a mixed diet of meat and vegetables, meat must form the base and bulk of any satisfactory food for dogs.

SKELETON OF A MAN "on all fours"

is strikingly similar to that of a dog

A flesh-eating animal and his digestive system is ideally adapted to the handling of meat. No one has succeeded in preparing a perfectly balanced ration for humans, but it has been done for dogs with horse meat, cereals, powdered bone, cod liver oil and other natural foods.

Of particular interest to the dog owner will be the following information from a report on the efficiency of various foods given dogs under various conditions by three members of the Mayo Clinic.

Homing Pigeons

A pigeon's wings move at approximately 150 to 200 times a minute in fast flight. The bureau of biological survey says that racing pigeons are bred only from birds with known records and that no breed besides the homing breed is used for racing pigeon breeding today.

Nellie Bly's World Trip

Nellie Bly, the noted newspaper woman, made a trip around the world to establish a record. She began her trip on November 14, 1899, and completed it on January 25, 1900, in 72 days, 6 hours, 11 minutes and 14 seconds.

Confederate Banner

The Confederate flag was a red flag with a blue stripe extending from the upper left-hand corner to the lower right-hand corner and from the upper right to the lower left corner. On the crossed bars were white stars.

Odd New Zealand Bird, Kiwi, Nears Extinction

The strangest bird in the world—the kiwi-kiwi, is described as follows in Boys' Life, the Boy Scout publication.

"Native of New Zealand, he nearly makes fact of ancient fable—current when the continent was first discovered—that everything around Australia was upside down. The kiwi is practically wingless and completely flightless. He has no visible tail. His brownish plumage, moreover, because the feather-filaments are dissiminated, looks more like coarse hair. His nostrils, unlike any other bird's, are at the very tip of the long beak, that is flexible and very sensitive to touch.

"The kiwi growls like a dog, and snaps his bill as you crack your fingers; he can hiss like a cat when angry. His extraordinarily powerful legs can give mighty kicks, not backward but forward, and have been known to break a bone in a man's hand. In small flocks, the few kiwis left of a disappearing species inhabit New Zealand's hilly forests. Females burrow long tunnels, laying in a nest at the very end of it two large eggs—eggs a quarter the length of the whole bird. Incubating is entirely the job of the male.

"Maoris are very fond of kiwi flesh broiled or roasted, so fond that the bird was hunted out before ever a white man saw one. Now the peculiar bird, distant relative of ostrich, emu, cassowary, and survivor of a species that flourished with the extinct, gigantic dinosaurs and fierce, sluggish moas, millions of years ago, is fast approaching extinction."

Marriage Promise Just Incident of Vacation?

A New Yorker, lifted out of his habitual caution by the balmy atmosphere of Florida during a winter vacation, brought suit against a girl he met down there, to recover a ring. The young lady contested the suit.

When it came up in court, the young man said that they had enjoyed a fond good-by on the beach, but later, when both had returned to New York, the girl had passed him up cold. The girl herself admitted it, saying:

"I really didn't know whether a should recognize him or not. Our acquaintance in Florida was really very slight."

"But," expostulated the court, glancing at the sparkling ring, "you promised to marry him, didn't you?"

"Why, yes," admitted the girl, "but that was all."—Los Angeles Times.

Europe's "Holy Alliance"

The Holy Alliance was the name of a league formed by Russia, Austria and Prussia after the fall of Napoleon in 1815 for the purpose of regulating the affairs of Europe "by the principles of Christian charity," says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. Notwithstanding its professed purpose the real policy of the Holy Alliance was to make every endeavor possible to stabilize existing dynasties and to resist all change. The league endured until 1830 and was in time joined by all the important and European monarchs except those of England and Turkey. The Monroe Doctrine was enunciated largely to warn the Holy Alliance not to interfere with the newly established republics in Latin America.

Biblical Flowers

There are comparatively few flowers named in the Bible. It is reported that as a whole the Syrian people were not particularly fond of flowers. Among those named are the myrtle, Isaiah, 4:13; Rose of Sharon, Isaiah, 35:1; Song of Solomon, 2:1; Lily, 1 Kings, 7:20; Son of Solomon, 2:16, 8:23; Matthew, 6. Flax is found in Exodus, Genesis, Leviticus, Esther, Judges, Proverbs and Kings. Burning bush (or acacia) is mentioned in Exodus, 3:4. The lily is an Arabic general term and applies to the tulip, ranunculus, narcissus, iris, water lily, and particularly the anemones which carpet the ground during the summer season throughout Palestine.

Treasure Trove on Farm

On the land of a widow farmer of Aarhus (Denmark) 6,000 copper and silver coins of the days of Eric Gilling (1259-1286), king of Denmark, were found. It was in the reign of this king that the first rigsdag, or general assembly, became an established legislature in Denmark. The coins, as treasure trove, were by law the property of the state, but the widow received a sum of money in exchange.

Only Daddy

Elizabeth Ann's mother was telling the little girl and her small brother the story of Cinderella. Suddenly there came a knock from the front door.

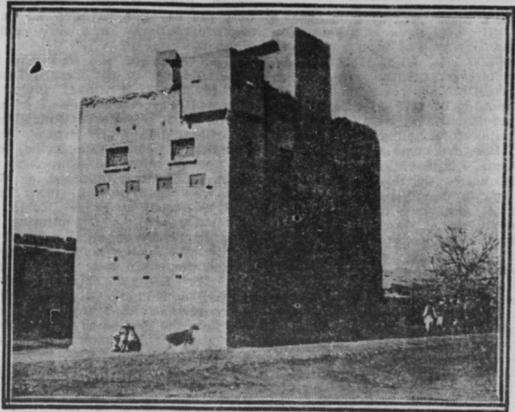

"Go see who's there," said her mother. "Maybe it's the fairy prince."

Elizabeth Ann hurried from the room. "No, it isn't a fairy prince," she called back, disappointedly from the hall. "It's only daddy!"

Big Business

John, age eight, had just been promoted to 3A. One day when he came home he was telling his mother about their new organization; that they had elected a president, vice president and such. Mother asked what the object of the organization was and after a moment John replied: "To promote better citizenship."

In Baluchistan

Block House in Baluchistan.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

DURING the disturbed conditions of the past year along the Afghan border of India, Baluchistan, a short distance to the south—another potential trouble zone for Great Britain—has been relatively quiet. Only on one or two occasions were their minor disturbances in this western frontier province.

The customs of Baluchistan are vastly different from those of the West, and many a strange compromise has to be made by the British political agents in dispensing justice among the natives.

The British do not own Quetta, though they conquered a small region north of it. They hold it under a perpetual lease from the Khan of Kalat. Formerly the ferocious tribes of these barren mountains and beyond used to depend largely for their existence upon raids into India, and for a time they lived sumptuously on the spoils of Delhi. Horde after horde of these savage warriors established temporary sovereignties over the rich cities of the central plains, only to be overwhelmed in turn when they became soft under the influence of luxury.

Much of the trouble among the natives in Baluchistan concerns wives. Girls are not of as much consequence as boys, and their parents give the warm coats and best food to the sons; so that the death rate among daughters is much higher, with the result that there are not enough wives to go around, especially as some of the richer men avail themselves of the Prophet's permission and buy more than one helpmate.

Wives, like camels, are bought at high prices, and, like camels, are often stolen. The girl's preference is not consulted, and as her betrothal in many cases has taken place before her birth, she not infrequently prefers another to her husband. Woe to her, however, if her unfaithfulness is discovered or suspected, for it then becomes the duty of her husband, her son, her father, or her brother to kill her without mercy, and to kill her lover, too, if he can be found.

What Adam Khan Did.

Adam Khan was sixteen years old. One night he was awakened and went to the tent door, but found no one. It happened a second time, but even the camels were quiet. So he lay and listened, and the third time he saw a man whispering to his mother, Amina. As Adam roused his father, Dost Mohammed, the lover, Nasho, escaped.

Dost Mohammed loved his wife and shrank from killing her. Nay, he even tried to protect her against the vengeance of her son. So it happened that when Adam tried to shoot his mother it was his father who first fell. Afterward she, too, was slain. Then, while it was yet dark, Adam hid in a gully (gully) near the door of her lover, with his gun pointed and cocked.

The lover, however, had been too crafty to return home, and when Adam Khan shot the first man who came out of the hut, in the gray twilight, it was the lover's father, Karim, who fell groaning. As he was desperately wounded, the old man of his own accord raised his head that another merciful bullet might end his suffering.

When day was advanced, and the English political agent had finished his breakfast, Adam Khan sought him and demanded justice.

Perhaps you would think justice would begin by hanging Adam. Far from it! That would have started a feud which would have lasted, perhaps, forever, and many yet unborn would kill each other because the balance of justice had, in this instance, kicked the beam. The English political agent, wise from long experience, summoned the village elders and laid the case before them.

Decision in Complicated Case.

Well versed in the customs of their forefathers from time immemorial, the elders easily arrived at their decision. Had the case been simple, both the unfaithful mother and her lover would have been slain and the case ended. In lieu of the lover, however, the latter's father had fallen and, so far, all was well.

But the boy Adam, in accomplishing the necessary killing of his mother, had suffered the loss of his father also. For this he deserved compensation. The blood recompense for plain murder is 3,000 rupees; but, as the case was complicated by the fact that the man's son and heir, not his enemy, had done, not a murder, but a manslaughter, the heir ought not to receive as much. Hence the elders decreed that the lover should pay Adam Khan 500 rupees and besides provide him with two girls as wives.

The English agent confirmed this Solomonlike decision; the lover paid the rupees, gave one niece to Adam, and promised a daughter, yet unborn, when she should be of marriageable age. All was acceptable to both parties and they have lived in love and harmony, after this happy union of their families, ever since.

Not always, however, does the English political agent comply exactly with the judgment of the elders. In the case of Miriam, for instance, the political agent found her with her nose slashed off and bound up with a dirty rag. He asked her who had done this "My husband," said she.

So the agent sent for the husband, Halim and asked why he had mutilated his loving wife.

"Oh, because I thought I saw her speaking to Sharbat Khan," said he. "But what she do so?" inquired the agent.

"Who knows? Perhaps not," said Halim.

"Well, but I really cannot let you cut off your wife's nose for nothing at all," said the political agent. "You must go to jail for one year."

Halim Preferred the Jail.

The elders came to the agent and remonstrated against such severity. "Perhaps it would not have been amiss," said they, "to put Halim in jail for three months. Yet a man's wife is his own. She is bought with a great price. Why should he not cut off her nose if he pleases? It is, after all, his own loss. Surely, Sahib, you will let Halim out of jail." "Tomorrow," said the agent, "I will give my decision."

The next day he pronounced this judgment: "I will release Halim on either of two conditions. Either he must restore his wife's nose safe and sound or he must cut off his own nose in exactly the same fashion as hers." The elders were amused greatly by this alternative. They withdrew their protest. Halim served his term in jail, and was released without retaining rancor against so just a sentence.

In another instance the Mohammedan Mahmud, instead of contenting himself with the girl chosen by his mother and sisters to be his wife and first to be seen by him after the marriage ceremony, found for himself a pretty Hindu girl and persuaded her to be his bride. But he could not make up his mind to marry her unless she should first profess his religion.

So Mahmud consulted the mullah of his village as to how she might become Mussulman. The mullah made no difficulty of it. All that was necessary, so he said, was that the lovely Hindu girl should say before him: "There is no God but God, and Mohammed is the prophet of God."

"But stay," added the priest. "You must pay for your bride, of course. As it would be sinful to give a great sum for her to the worthless Hindu, her father, you may give it to me, my son."

The young man easily perceived the reasonableness of the first part of the priest's proposal, but he could not by no means see why his wife's dowry should be given to the priest. In his perplexity he consulted the chiefs of the wazirs.

"The priest," said they, "is quite right in telling you not to give the dowry to the Hindus; but it should come to us, not to him. We are the authorities."

Billiard Table Instead of Feud.

But before this was done the elders of the mahsuds heard of the transaction. While approving, like the wazirs, the withholding of the money from the Hindus, they let it be known that, being the superiors of the wazirs, the elders of the mahsuds were the proper recipients in this instance.

All parties appealed the question to the British political agent. After mature consideration he readily foresaw that either of the dispositions proposed would most probably lead to a feud. Hence, in the interest of peace and as representing the real topnotch superior power of the whole region, he very reasonably decided that the dowry should be paid over to him.

As there was no appeal possible, this was readily complied with, and the political agent, not knowing a better disposition, made it over to the club as a contribution for the new billiard table!

HUTCHINS BLAMES WORLD'S FLIGHT ON SCHOOL SYSTEM

The present economic situation was blamed today on an educational system that teaches facts but not how to use them by Dr. Robert Maynard Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, in a commencement address at Berea College.

Dr. William J. Hutchins, president of Berea, conferred an honorary degree of doctor of law on young Hutchins, and was thus the first college president to confer an honorary degree on his son, a college president. Young Hutchins said:

"The world we have created is too much for us. We cannot tell who is responsible for anything. The machinery we have invented produces results that we did not foresee and cannot avoid. The industrial organization that has developed carries us along, we do not know why. That we have been unable to manage the structure we have erected is a reflection on the educational system we have developed."

Hutchins said the world needs more understanding rather than knowledge and an educational system which places a premium on independent thinking. He added:

"People are dying in equal misery in China and Chicago. Millions of men and women are hungry, homeless and ill-clad. The same streets they roam, mournful and disconsolate, are filled with the things they
