FRIDAY FIRE AT THE CHEMICAL LIME PLANT DESTROYS TWO DINKEYS

Two dinkey engines, the dinkey house and all the tools and repair parts contained therein, at the No. 1 plant of the Chemical Lime company, were destroyed by fire, shortly after the noon hour last Friday. While the origin of the fire is not definitely known it is believed to have started from the fire in one of the dinkeys.

Both dinkeys had been in operation Friday morning but were not to be used in the afternoon, consequently were run into the house. So far as known the fires had been properly banked. The fire was not discovered until the building was enveloped in flames and it was then too late to get the dinkeys out. The Undine Company went out and prevented the flames from spreading to other buildings. The loss is fairly well covered with insurance.

On Monday morning a fire, which originated at the furnace flue in the home of W. T. McCormick, on east Curtin street, burned a good sized hole in the roof before it was extinguished with chemicals by Bellefonte firemen. The origin of the fire has not been definitely determined. Owing to the extreme care of the firemen Mr. McCormick's damage to furniture, etc., was inconsequential. The house is insured.

WHY Increasing Vogue of Slang Is to Be Deplored.

The spoken language is degenerating in the United States and Broadway is receding into the "jargon of the jungle," Dr. Allan Sinclair Will, professor of Journalism at Columbia university, asserted. He presented a study on the growing use of slang in this country. Doctor Will declared that the common use of such phrases as "O, yeah," "okay," "didja," shows significantly that language degeneracy is taking place.

"The recurrence of the sound of 'O' in many expressions now heard is significant," Doctor Will reports. "It means going back to one of the first words heard in the primitive forest. At the birth of speech when prehistoric man was struck by a stealthy arrow or confronted by a hungry tiger ready to leap at him, he exclaimed 'O,' probably the first word ever heard from the mouth of man, and now Broadway is doing it and thinking it smart."

Why "Amen" Is Usually Used at End of Prayer

The word "amen" is probably one of the oldest words in our lexicon, harking back even further than the Biblical era to the days when Sanskrit was a spoken language.

Directly, however, we get the word from the Hebrew, which took it bodily from the Sanskrit or the Greek, which derives it from Sanskrit, and with its identical meaning.

Because the word signified "truth" the Hebrews used it at the end of prayers as an affirmation of the truth of what was said.

This usage has prevailed to this very day in prayers of all denominations; but the word "amen" has taken on the added meaning of "So may it be," "So be it."—Kansas City Times.

Jealously Kept Secret of Dessert Delicacy

While the rest of England walked hungrily by, the haughty Charles I, guarding the secret of the recipe with great care, sat in his pantry cramming himself with luscious ice cream. The greedy monarch, fearful lest the recipe might "leak out," pensioned his French cook, De Mirco, who first made ice cream for him, with a bountiful supply of "hush money" to keep the process secret.

The first recipe for ice cream is reported to have been published in Rome by Quintus Maximus Gurgus. Water ices and milk ices were introduced into Europe from Asia by Marco Polo. After this introduction, it was popular at the banquet tables of royalty in Germany, France and England.

The first wholesale ice cream business was introduced by James Frussell, of Baltimore, according to the National Dairy council. He owned a dairy and utilized the surplus cream for making ice cream. The sideline soon proved more profitable than the original milk business. Although still a dish for kings, ice cream is now enjoyed by almost every one. Last year every person in this country ate approximately 100 dishes of this American dessert, ice cream.—Wallace's Farmer.

New Zealand Legends Feature "Pelorus Jack"

There is a reference to "Pelorus Jack" in W. D. Boyce's book "Australia and New Zealand." He states that this was a 14-foot dolphin which made its home in French pass, a channel between the South island of New Zealand and a small island off its northern coast. This channel for years had "a singular claim to distinction because through its waters ships were often piloted by Pelorus Jack, which met the ships and accompanied them through the pass, diving and plunging around their keels. Parliament passed an act (in 1904) to protect him, but Pelorus Jack has disappeared. A whaling steamer operated in the vicinity of the pass a few years ago and the dolphin was never seen again.

There were many strange stories told of him; the Maoris declared that he was not less than two hundred and fifty-seven years old." Other books on New Zealand mention various Maori legends of this dolphin, which is named after Pelorus sound nearby. To the Maoris, he is a taniwha, or ocean-god, a beneficent deity.

Detroit's Future Seen by George Washington

Among other evidences of the foresight of George Washington, newly brought to light, is the recognition of the importance of Detroit as a waterway center in the development of the nation. As early as 1784, according to documents in the possession of the Clements library of the University of Michigan, Washington clearly foresaw and stated that Detroit—then a frontier village of a few hundred inhabitants—was "a point through which the trade of the lakes, Huron and all above it, must pass, if it centers in any state of the Union."

Since he could not have foreseen the importance of railroads, Washington concentrated his attention on waterways as a means of making the Northwest territory available and proposed a series of them to connect the Great Lakes with the Atlantic. In support of his plan he carefully computed distances from Detroit to eastern points, including Albany, Montreal, Philadelphia and Richmond.

Cuba's Early Inhabitants

Prehistoric relics which may have an important bearing upon future studies of the aboriginal Indians who formerly inhabited Cuba have been found by Prof. Robert Bennett, member of the American Indian Institute of New York, who recently completed five weeks of exploration in the province of Pinar del Rio. Among the objects found in caves and pits are 200 shell spoons, stone hammers, wooden pots and other primitive utensils. The most important find in Professor Bennett's opinion is the fragment of a skull which he is forwarding to the Smithsonian institute.

Shaw's View of Life

I am of the opinion that my life belongs to the whole community, and as long as I live it is my privilege to do for it whatsover I can. I want to be thoroughly used up when I die, for the harder I work the more I live. I rejoice in life for its own sake. Life is no "brief candle" for me. It is a sort of splendid torch which I have got hold of for the moment, and I want to make it burn as brightly as possible, before handing it on to future generations.—George Bernard Shaw.
