

BEAVER ARGUS.

Wednesday, Dec. 9, 1863. D. L. IMBRIE, Editor & Proprietor.

For President in 1864, ABRAHAM LINCOLN, OF ILLINOIS.

We have recently received several communications from different sources, accompanied by the names of the authors. Our rule is not to publish communications unless the name of the author is given.

The Beaver County Poor House

In company with a friend, we visited the Beaver County Poor House last week, and were indeed gratified with our visit and with the management of the House. We were kindly received by the Steward, Wm. Shroads, Esq., and his excellent lady, and shown through the various departments. Although we had formed some idea of the condition of the inmates, and the manner of their treatment, yet we found, upon examination, that we had no previous adequate conception of the charge and responsibility devolving upon the Steward. There are now forty inmates, and of that number are more or less helpless, more than one half entirely so. Six are totally blind, nine entire cripples, ten insane or idiotic, one deaf, dumb and blind, and remainder helpless. Those of our readers who have never visited the Poor House can have but a partial conception of the care, labor and responsibility resting upon the manager. The manner in which the paupers are cared for, is a credit to the Steward, the Directors, and to the County. The paupers are all comfortably clothed—their clothes, beds and rooms, all clean and tidy—their tables well furnished and everything bearing the marks of comfort and good feeling, that is gratifying to see. We could not help expressing our surprise that, among so many, every thing should be kept so scrupulously clean. The Steward is well adapted to the place, and his lady could have no superior. They are both attentive and watchful, and yet they blend in their intercourse with the inmates, so much consideration and kindness that we did not wonder to see them beloved by all. We were told by the paupers, over and over again, that Mr. Shroads was the best man and Mrs. Shroads the best woman in the world—they were so kind. While that state of feeling exists, everything must prosper. They do not attend to the inmates exclusively, but are equally attentive to the interests of the county—conducting, expending, managing it economically, and laboring to improve the building and farm. We are glad they were selected to fill that responsible position, and hope the Directors will see to it that they are paid for their labor and retained in the place. After partaking of a splendid meal, we took our leave, well pleased with all we saw, and both agreeing that the Steward, in addition to being an industrious, kind hearted christian man, was a perfect gentleman, and his lady one of the excellent of the earth.

Woodward's Invaluable Blessing

Judge Woodward, of the Supreme Court, and soon to be its Chief Justice, and lately the copperhead candidate for Governor, discovered, in his superior wisdom, that Slavery is an invaluable blessing. Truly, he is a worthy disciple of Calhoun. It has been asserted, many years ago, that Slavery was a bitter draught, and that America had received the endorsement of great and good men of all lands. But the world has grown wiser than the men who lived a long time ago, as well as Woodward. What have been the blessings and benefits the nation has derived from this cause, so much loved by Woodward? Let us see. It has produced discord among the people of the Union; it has caused the Southern and Northern sections to regard each other as enemies; it has introduced a foreign policy in our government which arrayed all the powers of Europe against us; it has caused the bloodiest and most unholily civil war ever known in the world; it has desolated more land in times of peace than we ever conquered in war; it has grown powerful and thriven at the expense of every interest in the Republic; and, finally, has destroyed obedience to wise laws and sown the seed of discord and hatred among the members of the same great National family.

It is true we might be pointed to the blessing brought us in the acquisition of Texas, at the cost of a war with Mexico. It brought us Florida, with its alligators and frogs, at the expense of a most disastrous Indian war, and they have been taken out again, by this great blessing of Woodward, after they have sucked from the National Treasury countless millions. Slavery, too, brought us Louisiana and Arkansas and Missouri, and took them out again, after they had grown powerful and prosperous at the public expense. These are only a few of the incalculable blessings spoken of by Judge Woodward. Perhaps he can get Judge Thompson, his copperhead friend on the bench, to write an opinion upon the subject, as we understand he is a great friend of the negro.

APPOINTMENT.—We learn that Col M. S. Quay, of this borough, has been appointed Chief of Transportation and Telegraph of the Pennsylvania Military, via Major G. W. Seco, deceased.

The Great Struggle

It looking back over the stormy period through which the Nation has passed since the outbreak of the great Rebellion, one can not help noticing the uniformity with which the loyal States have marched forward to conquest. Notwithstanding numerous disasters, and many defeats, the cause of the Union has scarcely, for a single moment, wavered.

We have gone forward steadily, step by step, overrunning the territory of rebellion, and winning back loyal States at every point, till at last there remains but little territory, comparatively, to overcome. Throughout this great struggle one can not help admiring the progressive development of the resources of the nation.

When the first call for 75,000 men was issued, many wondered where they would be got, and not a few were troubled in mind how the necessary funds were to be raised to support such an army. But with each new exigency, there arose new developments, and now we behold the Government carrying, with perfect ease, a load which would have dimmed the most sanguine at the outset of the contest.

The moral effect of this extraordinary exhibition of resources upon the nations of Europe, can hardly be imagined. Taxed to their utmost capacity, already they behold this country at one bound outstripping their mightiest efforts, and after having strained every nerve, they find that these Northern States have, with all these no effort at all, done more than they have accomplished.

The jealousy of England and France, excited by our rapid success, has lately given way to a feeling of apprehension which they behold the young giant of the Western World descending into the arena of combat. We shall not soon again hear of intervention. That business is "played out." Neither shall we hear much more of sympathy for the rebels in England. That, too, is fast playing out. Englishmen are not quite fools. They have one peculiarly happy faculty, developed in a very high degree—that of perceiving "which side of the bread is buttered." So with the French. Our success has opened their eyes of John Jay Graepant, and we shall find him to be excessively polite, and obliging in the future. For the rest, we have on us to follow up our successes for a short time, when we shall be a free, happy and peaceful nation, more indissolubly bound together than ever before.

Our National Finances

It is now probable that none of the great events of this historic age will make deeper or more permanent marks than those that relate to our National Finances. That which is now not only possible, but even easy in actual practice, would have been deemed and treated with contempt, as impossible when this war began. No man ever dared to predict or to ask for, half that has been realized, and it is there for all to see a test of the sagacity of any set of men, or a triumph of those who advocated another. The case is deep and more impressive than any such condition of affairs could have developed, and it is some of these remarkable points, to which we will call a moment's attention.

In the first place, the nation has been freed from financial dependence on any and all other nations, a fact of itself unparalleled in the history of the world. This release has been effected also, when the requirements of the country exceeded all former precedents, when the demand for money was greater than the proudest and most powerful State of Europe ever knew, and when the demand was clearly shown to be one that must be protracted over some years of stubborn and sometimes doubtful conflict. Suppose it had been stated in the beginning of 1861, that the loyal States of the Union would require a thousand millions of dollars within the next two or three years to prosecute a war against the whole South in the hands of traitors, what financier of Europe would have hesitated to say that to place such loans as would have been needed, at par, would be impossible, who indeed would have assented to the possibility of negotiating such loans at all. Yet the day of trial and of peremptory demand for all this time, and under circumstances far less favorable than might have been anticipated as to the trial of an alternative between European and American resources. No sane man but knew that any such a war might want would be impossible in Europe except on very low terms or rates. The foreign journals and capitalists said this before we asked for money. They must have seen that we were under a ban. But by a great order of Providence, as we must deem it, the financial connection of the United States and Europe was severed at that critical hour.

We did not ask a dollar in the world's markets; we did not need a dollar and do not yet need one. The structure of our National credit has risen like a great temple on its own foundation as the war progressed, and at this hour it is comparatively greater than that of any other nation on the globe. It is a legacy to our emergency, great as they have been, and great as they may be, has never been seriously wanting and it is now most undoubted and complete.

This important subject will be continued in our next issue.

Re-Enlistments of Veterans

Captain Cutbertson, Provost Marshal of the 24th Congressional District, sends us the following correspondence relative to the re-enlistment of veteran volunteers, which will be found to interest the people of the district:

PROVOST MARSHAL'S OFFICE, 24th DISTRICT PENN'A., New Brighton, Dec. 2, '63. To Col. Jos. B. Fry, Provost Marshal General, U.S. Washington, D.C.: Will men in the three years' regiments now in the service, who re-enlist under circular number ninety-five, be credited to the Government under the President's last call for three hundred thousand?

JOHN CUTBERTSON, Captain and Provost Marshal of the 24th District of Penn'a., Washington City, D.C., Dec. 4, 1863. To Capt. John Cutbertson, Provost Marshal of the 24th District of Penn'a.: Re-enlistments in accordance with circular number ninety-five, will be credited to the quota under the recent call. JAS. B. FRY, Provost Marshal Gen. U.S.

Gen. McClellan Nominated for President

CINCINNATI, Dec. 5.—The National Conservative Committee, which has been two days in session at the Burnet House, terminated its labors yesterday by adopting the Kentucky platform of 1855, and nominating George B. McClellan for President. They were unable to agree on the Vice President, and so adjourned to meet in Philadelphia on the 23d inst. It simply means an effort of the Border States to convert the Democratic nomination next year, and if that fails, to raise a third party, which shall give them the balance of power, and compel the adoption of their views by the Democrats or Republicans.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The House has elected Mr. Colfax Speaker by a twenty-one majority. There was great applause in the galleries. The speakership question was settled by enough of the border State members voting with the Republicans to give a majority to the friends of law and order. The members whose names Mr. Etheridge refused to place upon the roll, have been refused to be called by the House.

WAR MEETING

By adjournment of a meeting held at the Court House in Beaver, Saturday, Dec. 5th 1863. Hon. Daniel Agnew presided and Hon. Wm. Cairns, Capt. J. Stockdale, George Neely and Jesse Carothers acted as Vice-Presidents, and B. B. Chamberlin and T. M. McCoad Secretaries.

Every worthy township and borough in the county was represented in the meeting, and with the exception of Patterson, Monn and Keenon, they generally reported in favor of the County Commissioners making a county subscription for bounties to volunteers to fill our quota. All were in favor of petitioning Congress to increase the day of the private soldier.

Capt. Cutbertson, Provost Marshal, being called upon, gave an intelligible and lucid exposition of the plan of the Government to raise volunteers, and to allow credit to each district for all enlistments to the 5th of January next, and in order to secure the quota and avoid a draft, County and local district operations seemed the only practicable means of success. New volunteers, and re-enlistments of veterans now in the field, whose term of service is about to expire, will be accepted to the time of the draft.

Before adjournment until afternoon, H. Rice, John White, Chas. Calhoun, Wm. M. Reed and J. H. Cunningham were appointed as a business committee, to report to the meeting.

Our soldiers in Florida supply themselves with beef cattle by foraging in the enemy's country. They enjoy also the luxury of game of all descriptions, which abound in that State. Venison can be had for the shooting.

The Charleston (S. C.) Courier says that the pay of a rebel soldier for a month will not suffice to purchase a pair of gloves.
