BEAVER ARGOS

Vol. 40-No. 21, Beaver, Wednesday, May 25, 1864. Established 1818

THE WAR POETRY HAS PRODUCED FEW, IF ANY, MORE TOUCHING POEMS THAN THAT WHICH FOLLOWS, AND WHICH IS ILLUSTRATED IN "HARPER'S WEEKLY."

April 20, 1864.

Three years ago to-day We raised our hands to Heaven, And on the rolls of muster, Our names were thirty-seven. There were just a thousand bayonets, And the swords were thirty-seven, As we took the oath of service, With our right hands raised to Heaven...

General Forrest and his Family.

A Knoxville correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune writing under date of April 19th, gives the pedigree of the Forrest family, from which it seems that they have all been trained as slave-drivers and women-whippers, and that the massacre at Fort Pillow was but the legitimate result of a brutal education...

A Villain at the End of his Rope.

A wounded field officer, just from Fredericksburg, states that those among our wounded who had their arms with them upon entering that city, were persecuted by Mr. Slaughter, the rebel Mayor, that their retaining their arms terrified the inhabitants, who were anxious to nurse and feed the wounded, and induced them to store their muskets, &c., in a house designated by the Mayor...

A DAY'S MARCH

AN INCIDENT OF THE WAR.

Right above our heads blazed the overpowering sun. We looked up piteously to see some friendly cloud interpose in our behalf, and cast a generous shadow over our panting columns. But nothing save the clear blue of interminable space, unrelieved by a single cloud, and emblazoned by the scorching sun, met our despairing eyes. Still we marched on, our blouses saturated with perspiration, and our temples throbbing painfully amid the tramp of a thousand programs...

A Furlough for Thirty Days.

It will be gratifying to persons having friends wounded in the recent battles of the Wilderness, to learn that arrangements have been made that the wounded who are able to be so treated, are to receive a furlough for thirty days, while the great part of those who are fit to travel will be forwarded to the hospitals of their respective States...

General Grant in Camp.

A letter writer has been furnished by a military friend, who had passed some days at the headquarters while in Culpepper, with an account of his visit and the habits of the Lieutenant General. The details which he gives relate to the personal habits of Gen Grant. They mark and individualize the man with whom rests so much of the power to affect for weal or woe the future of his country...

Riding at Midnight.

The horse knows his way home, candle or no candle, therefore I let him find it for himself; and I give this word of advice to persons, inexperienced riders, that they take too much upon themselves when they sit at the bridle, as they do. When you worry your horse by pulling at the curb (the curb itself is altogether a wrong thing), you distract his proper business. He is a better judge than you can be as to the distance his horse should be from the road, so that he may see it to advantage. It is quite a mistake to hold up his head, the darker the night, the more freedom you should give him...
