[From the New York Tribune.] "THE NEEDY BARD." BY GEORGE COOPER.

W soul is sad while wandering Ender the Autumn sky, For everything has run to "seed,"
And so have I!

How soon the Summer's faded rose The selfish year forgets! 0! how I wish the "golden" corn Would pay one's legal debts !

Once, rich and gay, were yonder banks, Where merry birds have nested: Their notes now circulate no more-Like mine they are protested.

The "Purple" Nature brings, to clothe The leaves in gaudy hue, The leaves have donned; would she had brough "Fine linen" with her too!

They talk of Autumn's "generous hand," V! give me leave to doubt If these ripe nuts beneath my feet Are all she will "shell out !"

O L could I take with Summer birds To wings and fly away ! (Two wings of some nice juicy fowl I'd rather take to-day !)

You scentless flower, last of its clan, To earth in vain would cling; Time, like the "Revenue," has put A stamp on everything !

To change the color of my fate No gleam from Nature's won, For everywhere I turn I meet One vast, infernal "Dun!" November, 1864.
