The whole of the surroundings were so entirely different, and apparently so life-long and respectable from those that I believed formerly hedged in the lady, that I was in doubt. But, no, the longer I thought upon the matter the more I felt satisfied of the identity. And the remembrance was singular. While detained in Washington during the war, awaiting orders, I was invited by a brother to a wine supper. The people giving the entertainment were strangers, and taking my friend's word for it that I would be welcome. I went with him. The house was a plain uppretending affair, but offered a display of upholstery rather uncommon about Washington. I learned that the house and furniture belonged to a "secesh" that had hastily left the city before the battle of Bull Run, putting their property in the hands of friends. The parlors were in a blaze of light, and the glass globes about the gas jets were some pretty women, and number of young men in and out of uniform. The bare necks and arms of the women indicated a party, but my friend void me that this sort of thing went on every night. We had a rich repast, garnished with choice wines, and the lively flow of talk the hast named generally brings out. I was particularly struck with two of the givest—one a slender youth with large, dark eyes, and broad, thoughtful forchead, whom I took for an Italian or Frenchman; the other a beautiful young woman of twenty, in fact, but much younger in appearance. I found this young lady exceedingly charming—as she was not only loving in person but lively in mind.

We broke up at a late hour in the night or rather at an early hour in the morning, and being ordered away is few nights after, the wine supper, and the merry people there assembled on this occasion were questionable. My friend of the law making power helped the lady in with a bow, the door swung to with a bang, and the fair lady drove away, while the Solon came up the steps humming a tune to himself and snapping his law making fingers as if especially pleased with himself. Having a speaking acquaintance, I begged pardon for curiosity, and asked Solon the name of his friend.
