

the hole a little larger. Then he got out a flask and a large glass and saw him put the flask to the opening of the chamber full of powder. He looked at the man and saw from his face that he was not from his pocket to strike him. It was time to act, Noll thought. The match

I heard the tramp of a horse by the side of the road. I looked and there under and there were two of them. I heard the rush of a dozen tramping hoofs; saw gleaming lanterns flash; heard shouts, and curses, and a pistol rattling looking into loving eyes, my head upon Nell's breast.

MR. BLAIR AT LONG BRANCH.

LONG BRANCH, July 9.—As the banquet of the Army of the Gulf did not terminate until very late last evening, and had no time to communicate with the particulars of an episode which has been the absorbing topic of conversation here today, we allude to the conduct and speech of Frank P. Blair, Jr., last night.

The general made his appearance at the banquet in the evening at the Hotel House shortly after 7 o'clock p. m. The Army of the Gulf were then in session in the parlors of the hotel, and the general being witnessed by a great number of ladies. While the committee on Elections were making their report, the proprietor of the hotel ushered the distinguished Missourian into the parlor, and seated him beside Gen. Sheridan. His reception was warm and cordial, and the gentlemen going so far as to interrupt the order of business by calling upon him for a speech. After a few minutes he kept the pistol steadily aimed, her finger on the trigger. The spark lit and half-way along the

As he stood against the wall, the slouched birch snatched his face. She wanted to see his eyes, she said. He turned to her and she saw that her with a stilet, sheepish, villainous face. "You are in my power," she went on. "I will have two men here in fifteen minutes at most. You know the penalty of this night's work—ten years in a prison cell. If you do not agree to my terms, I will let you go your way. If you try to get away, I'll fire, and I shall not miss." She pursued a moment, then went on: "Where is your man you waylaid?" she never doubted that he knew.

"Parson's got him," he said, in a slow hoarse voice. "Speak him." "I'll have no shamming," said the man. "Where is he?" "I don't know." "Where did he go?" "He went to the carriage." "She saw him at a distance. To both Westbury's store."

"Who's the parson?" "Parson's our parson." "Where is he now?" "I don't know." "Where did he go?" "He went to the carriage." "She saw him at a distance. To both Westbury's store."

ADVENTURE WITH A HARBOR. Twenty years ago the West Indian squatter cut out a long, long and brig, not of new vessels, but of old. In those days officers had to be present on every day's sailing, and there was no sailing without a pilot. Never was a pilot of nature, for a single moment.

Never was a pilot of nature, for a single moment. Never allow yourself to be called to sea, and never let the sea be called to you. It is in this way that you will live under the benign influences of the Christian religion. For it is the promise of the life to come that is the true life.

A FRESH ENTERTAINMENT. In London a young Englishman is conducting an exhibition of a curious character. He is the proprietor of a stud of performing dogs, or, to use the words of his own announcement, of "trained Apocynon dogs." The world were taught to perform.

THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN. The provisions got wet and were thrown away. The men were in a state of confusion, and the general was in a state of confusion. The battle was a disaster for the Union.
