EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION
A magnificent Pen Design, 18x27 inches of the lamented ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S IMMORTAL EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION, executed by W. A. COLLINS of No. 17 Nassau St., N. Y., having been Photo-Lithographed by the celebrated Osborne Process. Copies are now ready for sale and can be procured by application to the subscribers.
This work, irrespective of its great historic value, is the most superb piece of penmanship ever executed, and in itself is an ornament that should adorn every household. No liberty loving American should be without a copy. None can form an idea of its classiness of design, beauty of execution, and completeness of detail, without examination. It has been pronounced by the most experienced connoisseurs as equal to the finest steel plate engraving, and the fact of its having been executed with an ordinary steel pen and common writing ink is taken into consideration, it ranks as a marvel of patience, perseverance and art. Copies will be sent to any address in the union on receipt of $2.50 each.

This Infallible Remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs and strong caustic solutions with which the people have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces a perfect and permanent cure of the worst cases of chronic Catarrh, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic. It removes offensive breath, Loss or Impairment of the sense of taste, smell or hearing, Watering or Weak Eyes, and Impaired Memory, when caused by the violence of Catarrh, as they all frequently are. We offer in good faith a standing reward of $500 for a case of Catarrh that we cannot cure.
Sold by most Druggists Everywhere.
PRICE ONLY 50 CENTS. Ask your Druggist for the Remedy, but if he has not yet got it on sale don't be put off by accepting any miserable worse than worthless substitute, but enclose sixty cents to me and the Remedy will be sent you post paid. Four packages $2, or one dozen for $5.

[From the Harrisburg Telegraph.]
THE GOVERNORS OF PENN'A.
MR. EDITOR:—Seven years ago I walked through the room at Harrisburg containing the painted likenesses of every Governor of Pennsylvania since the formation of our Constitution. There were then (1862) fifteen likenesses of these distinguished men, and the sight inspired me with a strong desire to write a sketch of the administration of each, from my own recollection. This I communicated to you, and you kindly encouraged me in doing so, which I promised to do, and furnish you with the result. This I have neglected to do, but another picture is added to the gallery. That one I have not seen, as I have not been at Harrisburg since it was put up.
Thomas Mifflin, of Philadelphia, was the first Governor of Pennsylvania under the Constitution, in 1790. Of this Governor the writer of this article knows nothing from recollection but history records him as a highly respectable man. His name is signed to the Constitution of the United States, formed in 1778, and to the Constitution of the State of Pennsylvania, formed in 1790. Governor Mifflin, I think, died about, or a little before the expiration of his Gubernatorial term, having served nine years.
Thomas M'Kean, of Philadelphia, the second Governor of Pennsylvania, was elected to that office in 1799, nine years after he had signed the Constitution of the State. His place of nativity was Chatham, a village of Chester county, near the Delaware State line. His father was a worthy innkeeper at Chatham, and it detracts nothing from the good character of this great jurist and statesman to say that when a boy he was hostler for his father.
Thomas M'Kean, when a young man, received a good classical education, and rose to the highest honors his native State could bestow. As a Chief Justice he stood very high, and his decisions are considered as among the clearest and most judicious of any delivered in his day.
Thomas M'Kean was elected by the Democratic party of Pennsylvania soon after the organization of that party, and in the same year that Thomas Jefferson was elected President of United States. The first term of Mr. M'Kean passed harmoniously and he was re-elected in 1802. During his second term he opposed some favorite measures of the Legislature, and an open rupture took place between the Executive and the Democratic party in that body. A law giving jurisdiction to justices of the peace in all cases up to one hundred dollars, and an arbitration law was passed, although both were warmly opposed by the Governor. The disaffection became so great that in 1805 the Democratic party nominated Simon Snyder as their candidate for Governor; but the Governors patronage was large, and all the office holders and the most of their friends stood by the Governor; and the Federalists going with them, again elected Thos. M'Kean as executive for a third term. The last term of the Governor passed rather quietly, and at the close he retired to private life.
Simon Snyder was the third Governor [illegible] and the Federal party made a fierce opposition to his election. They were opposed to leather-aproned Governors; but the people willed it and he was elected in 1808 by a large majority. In addition to his being one of the working people he was the first Governor of German descent. He received a good common education and possessed a great share of good common sense. His residence was Selinsgrove, Union county, but he was originally of Lancaster county.
During Governor Snyder's first term of office, a difficulty arose between him and James Madison, then President of the United States. This contention was about some property in Philadelphia, claimed by individuals, and guaranteed to them by the State of Pennsylvania. This property Mr. Snyder attempted to defend against the claim of the United States, but the controversy was not serious, and was soon amicably adjusted by the State of Pennsylvania paying the money to the Government of the United States. In this controversy the Governor lost and gained some friends but on the whole made fully as much out of the defense of State right doctrine as any other has done since his day.
In 1811 Simon Snyder was triumphantly elected a second time. The next year the United States declared war against Great Britain, and in the struggle which followed all the energies of the Union were called into action. In this emergency Governor Snyder proved an able aid to the General Government. He devoted all his energies to bringing out the full strength of the State. Volunteers received every aid and encouragement the Governor could give them. At that time our nation was a weak one; our volunteers and drafted militia were poorly paid, only receiving $8 dollars a month with rations, but had to find their own clothing. During the first two years of the war our land forces were badly beaten on the northern frontier. Gen. Hull surrendered, Generals Wilkinson, Winder and Smyth, were unfortunate leaders; and our troops were sent to Halifax, as prisoners of war. In all these trials Gov. Snyder never for a moment faltered in his exertions for the good of the country, proving him worthy of the trust confided to him. Fortunately for the country, we were everywhere successful on the ocean, and our navy bravely humbled our proud and tyrannical adversary. Perry beat and captured the British fleet on Lake Erie on the 10th of September, 1814, and our young Generals were more fortunate than the old. McCombs, Brown, Harrison, and others, did their country good service and cheered the hearts of the lovers of our country everywhere. It is almost a pity to report that a considerable part of the Federal party made a serious opposition to the measures of the United States Government during the heat of the war, rejoicing at our defeats and denying our victories. They advocated the claims of Britain, and called a convention to meet at Hartford, Connecticut. It is said they intended to resolve that the war must cease, but they had prudence or decency enough not to publish any resolutions or proceedings. It was supposed that the vandalism of the British in burning Washington city, and every defenceless town on the shores of the Chesapeake Bay, deterred the Hartford convention from publishing their proceedings. Be this as it may the party was badly disgraced by their opposition to the Government of the country at such a time.
In 1814 Simon Snyder was elected for the third term almost without opposition. During his administration a difference of opinion arose between him and his friends in the Legislature relative to chartering a number of new banks (eight or ten). Mr. Snyder opposed it as a financial mistake, but the Legislature passed it over his veto, and the new banks went into operation with more sail than ballast; and, as the Governor had predicted, they soon upset or run aground. In this transaction the Governor gained much credit for his prudence and his financial judgment.
In 1815 the war ended, and at the end of Gov. Snyder's third term, in a time of peace and prosperity, he retired to private life, much beloved by his friends and respected by all.
In 1817 William Findley, of Franklin county, was elected the fourth Governor of Pennsylvania. Mr. Findley had assisted in forming the Constitution of Pennsylvania. He was the forth and last of the signers of that instrument called to the office of Governor. He was a gentleman of reputable attainments and possessed great goodness of heart. Indeed, it was with great difficulty that he could pronounce the word "no." It might in truth be said of Gov. Findley that "his feelings leaned to virtues side;" but he was the Governor of the Democratic party, and the Federalists made desperate attacks on him. During his administration no particular measures of State policy were agitated; but the two opposing parties were about equally divided in the House of Representatives, and this circumstance caused stormy sessions. Mr. Findley had been State Treasurer before he was Governor, and a matter of about three hundred dollars in amount, said to have been lost in counterfeit or broken bank notes, could not be fully explained, and the opposing party strove hard to prove a fraud out of the transaction. It was a small sum, but the Federal party exerted every nerve to impeach the Governor, and would have succeeded, but two prominent men of their party refused to go against Mr. Findley, and boldly cast their votes for his acquittal. These men were William Wilkins, of Allegheny, and Richard M. Coulter, of Westmoreland. In 1820 these gentlemen cast their first votes with the Democratic party. Mr. Findley was again the candidate of his party for a second term, but was defeated by Joseph Heister, of Berks. The majority was small (1,400). Mr. Findley was afterward elected to the Senate of the United States.
Joseph Heister, of Berks, was elected Governor of Pennsylvania by a small majority in 1820. He was what was then called a third party Democrat; but he was the candidate of the Federal party. He was a wealthy citizen of Reading and a gentleman of good standing. During his administration a sum of money was legislated to the Union canal, and as the work ended at Reading, the people were ready to charge the Governor with complicity in the transaction. Little else worthy of note transpired during Mr. Heister's term of office, at the end of which he refused to be again a candidate for Gubernatorial honors. He was the fifth Governor of the State.
John Andrew Shultze was elected the sixth Governor of Pennsylvania in 1823. The Federal party had again nominated a third party Democrat. The Federalists and twice gained the election by nominating a Democrat, but the third attempt failed, although they had chosen a worty gentleman and a fine scholar for their candidate. This gentleman was Andrew Gregg, of Centre county. In this election the Federalists of Pennsylvania made the last desperate effort, and were defeated by a large majority.
James Buchanan, of Lancaster, presided over a meeting in which the resolutions commenced that "We as Federalists, will support Andrew Gregg, of Centre county, for Gov. of Pennsylvania." The failure of the Federalists in this election seemed about a quarter of a century.
Mr. Shultze's administration was really a good one—his patronage was very large, owing to the natural growth of the State, and the system of internal improvement having just been adopted and placed in the hands of the Governor.
This power was exercised with great prudence and good judgement. It might indeed be said that Governor Shultze called the best sense of the State around him—his officers everywhere were capable and honest. No Governor of Pennsylvania ever made better appointments, and it is certainly no dishonor to Simon Cameron to have been charged with being his secret and confidential adviser.
During Mr. Shultze's administration, the spirit of improvement was abroad in the State. From the tidewater to the lakes all were in expectation of public improvements. The Governor opposed the loan of a million of dollars, but had to bow to the will of the people, and at the end of his second term we had borrowed six millions of dollars. The Legislature took the appointment of Canal Commissioners out of the hands of the Governor and placed it in their own—and economy was not the order of the day with that body.
In 1826 Mr. Shultze was re-elected Governor of Pennsylvania without any serious opposition, and passed his last term of office without much opposition. John Andrew Shultze was in truth the last Democratic-Republican of the old school elected in Pennsylvania. The two political parties broke to pieces during Governor Shultze's administration, and the strongest political organization was formed out of the two that ever existed in the United States. In 1823 none called themselves Federalists. The name of Federalists had become odious; but under the lead of cunning, sagacious men, they formed a new and powerful party called the Jackson Democrats. Every Federal newspaper in the State of Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia joined the party. Every Federal paper in Pennsylvania but three turned Jackson Democrats. The three exceptions were the U. S. Gaz. of Philadelphia, the Village Record, of West Chester, and the Pittsburgh Gazette.
In Congress the Democratic Republican party had always nominated a President for the United States by a Congressional caucus, and in 1829 they nominated Wm. H. Crawford of Georgia; but it was soon evident that the party would not agree to this nomination. The party was greatly divided. The claims of Crawford, Adams, Clay, Calhoun and Jackson were all urged on the party. In this situation no choice was made by the people in 1824, and John Q. Adams was elected by Congress. Mr. Adams' administration was a very pure one; but he was much persecuted, and in 1828, the Federal and Democratic amalgamation had become so well organized that Gen. Jackson was elected by a large majority—receiving fifty two thousand majority in Pennsylvania.
During the war, of 1812, the Federals stigmatized Gen. Jackson as a "low blackguard without talents virtue, or decency." They said that Gen. Adair planned the defenses of Orleans and constructed the fortifications—that Gen. Jackson arrived at New Orleans four days before the British attack, examined the works and pronounced them well arranged and defensible. The battle was fought and we had eight men killed—both parties keeping their ground. The British took two weeks to bury their dead, care for the wounded and re-embark. But out of those circumstances the Federalists built a powerful political party which lasted for nearly forty years, and was only broken by a large majority of that party taking up arms against the United States government.
In 1829, George Wolf, of Northampton county, was elected the seventh Governor of Pennsylvania. Mr. Wolf was an old school Federalist, but in the new arrangement he was called to office as the first Governor of the amalgamated party. Gov. Wolf was a pleasant gentleman, courteous in his manners to friend and foe. No one could find fault with his department, and he appeared to know nothing of his enemies. Indeed he appeared to think that he was the Governor of the whole State and not of a party; but his appointments were strictly confined to the new amalgamated party, the Federal wing receiving a full share. In the selection of advisers Governor Wolf did not appear to possess the good judgment of his immediate predecessor—the Governor was thought to be far superior to his advisers, both in wisdom and prudence.
In 1832, Mr. Wolf was reelected Governor for a second term.
The Executive patronage was very large, the expenditures being nearly three millions per annum. Such a heavy disbursement was hard to manage with economy. The Governor was a man of honest intentions, and he attempted to keep down expenditures as much as possible, but his efforts were fruitless. At one time he sent a message to the Legislature, saying that "prodigality and profusion" was the order of the day
