T. H. Douglass, Sce'y. -----Indian Summer. A corresponde of the Pittsburgh Gazdie, writing over the algusture of "G. A.," says inquiries have been made if we should have Indian Summer; we are sour the end of its allotted space, the lith inst. When forests were permitted to stand, the Indian Summer came on the 2d, and condian summer came on use 22, and con-tinued to the 11th of November. In, latter days it does not develop itself within that time, but shows itself in patches, sometimes in October, early and later in November. It began its development in full earnest this season, at i allotted season, the 2d, continued on the 3d and 4th, with heavy, white frosts, smoky and dark mornings, and a real pleasant midday and a red setting sun. On the 5th signs of a great storm appeared in the West and North West, with a depreciation of the temperature of the rmometer, and a partial rise of the barometer, and then a fall of the same which has been verified in the last few days by snow storms, the leaves and debris covered and rendered inert, and Many theories have been sent forth: Summer? The most plausible we have is, that the Indian Summer does exist until after the October frosts; when the leaves fall with the debris of nature, we have heats ferments and thence smoke and an equilibrum in the atm phere, which prevents a rapid condense tion of vapor by an extreme contra-During the prevalence of Indian Sun mer there is a variation at morning, noo and night, with but little difference in the thermometer, at these particular periods, which maintains a regular equilibrium in the atmosphere. In Inlian Summer the thermonteter may be thirty to forty degrees in the mornififty five to sixty at noon, thirty eight to forty at night, and hold so the term, while in other parts of the year it is not so limited as it were by rule. illustration, in March, April or Decemper, or any of the winter months, one or two white frosts will surely produce rain within twenty four to seventy two hours. The thermometer may range at 12 o'clock a. m. at sixty degrees, night at thirty five, morning twenty, and you may be sure of a storm in forty eight to seventy two hours. It is the great con-trast by sudden changes that produces immediate storms. Every morning in frosts, and even freezing, yet not produc storms from the regular order of the atmosphere. Usually, after a regular Indian Summer, the accumulated condensation of vapors result in a long rain or snow storm, commonly called Squaw Winter. You may look at the thermon eter to-night and you find it at 45 deg.; to-morrow evening you find it 20 to 30 the next morning it may be 30 to 35; the next 40 to 50; next 25 to 65, and on that day the storm may develope. Sudden changes, with great contrasts in the thermometer, are the beginning of the generating of storins, varying from January to May, from two days to four, before the atmosphere acquires the constency to discharge the condensed vapors; from May to September it takes a longer time; from September to October 20th, six to twelve days, but will surely come, and the longer the signs the longor or more copious the storm. From November to May the storms are more rapid and generating. The seasons of the year have been systematic in an order which indicates a egular cold winter. The present lunar month indicates a cold, stormy month snow storms, more or less in discharge being more prevalent and fears that ther will not be a navigable river for a practical use unless a south wind should prevail for three or four days. In former years, a freezing November has ded a warm December and January, but from the remarkable character of
