SELECT MISCELLANY. PAPA DOBLAN'S DECISION.

"I suppose she will marry some time or other, and perhaps after all she will be as well off to marry now as to wait half a dozen years."

Old Mr. Dorlan turned the letter over in his hand and looked at the pretty blonde in the easy chair opposite. It would be hard to give her up, but with either of these two men he felt that she would be happy.

West Harley wrote:

The first was a counterpart of himself in his younger days. There were a few improvements, such as a little better prospect, a few more dollars than he possessed at twenty-five, but the principle, the straight forward innesty and strength of purpose were there.

The other was the very man he had propose to make her my wife with your consent. My name, position and means are well known to you. I await your reply. Yours, CLARENCE HILLSDALE."

He gave her the letters and she read them carefully over. A blush read them carefully over. A blush stole up, mantling brow and cheek when she concluded West Harley's letter, and at the end of Hillsdale's a delighted exclamation escaped her.
"You cannot marry both. Which shall it be"

shall it be?"
"Papa, I don't know. I used to really love West, until Clarence came; but now—well, Clarence is rich and stylish, and yet West is—good and true. You shall decide."
"And you will abide by my declision?" as wax, half filled with freshly tron-ed clothes, and its proprieties, a pale, meek-faced woman, bearing the marks of poverty upon every linea-ment. Two children from their supper of bread and milk, looked at the stranger, and hailed the apples, as the grocer rolled them into a basket with a shout of delight. "With all my heart, papa."

Ruthic went back to her easy ly to papa's superior judgment, and he, with quite as much if not u de-gree or so more anxiety than he had felt at his own matrimonial settling, he, with quite as much if not a degree or so more anxiety than he had felt at his own matrimonial settling, sat back and reflected.

Honesty and truth were jewels seldom found, but with money and power on the other side of the scale he was a little afraid they would sink into nothingness.

"Well, I will wait. Some way I shall regays the truth of the matter?"

he was a little afraid they would sink into nothingness.

"Well, I will wait. Some way I shall receive the truth of the matter and know into whose hands to place the happiness of my little Ruth."

"Do you know young Harley?" he asked a neighbor.

"Yes. Bless you, who don't? He is one of our solid young men."

"Do you know Hillsdale?"

"O yes. He's another. One of the best fellows in the city."

So there it was. Both were perfection. Ruth liked both, and so did he. He could not choose between them.

"Wes, did."

"Yes, did."

"Is everything here? A barrel of flour, tive pounds of sugar, one of cut, two of coffee, four of butter, a bushel of apples, crackers, raisins, and a bag of cakes! There all here in the book. It is all right?"

"Yes, sir, they are all here."

"Yes, wait a moment. Here back with me?"

"Yes. Wait a moment. Here you. I must not be behind Harley, God bless him! may he have a family swashing to pay for before another. Christmas," And Pana lor-

he. He could not choose between them.

These letters arrived on the second of December. On the fourth each gentleman received a brief note from Mr. Dorlafi, with a few pleasant but unsatisfactory lines. He would consider, he said, and give them his answer, if they would wait with patience.

On the twenty-fourth there was a ter chance, tudy these lovers of yours.

And Ruthle studied.

They did not stay away a moment longer than eliquette demanded. As soon as they could frame an excuse, they maintered toward her table. Of course they were not jealous, for each other's motives were unknown, and course tagy were not jeasous, for each other's molives were unknown, and they met as well-bred men do, and after offering their salutations to Buth, fell into an easy conversation.

"These are pretty articles," said Chrence, taking up a pair of velvet alippers. "Did you make them, Miss Dorlan?"

"Yes. I have but those two pair left; won't you take a pair? They must be exactly your size."

"Yes. I believe they are. What do you expect in return?"

"My price as you see is ten dollars, but in a case like this, we trust more to the generosity of the purchaser." She said this with a charming smile, and he placed a little roit of bills in her hand.

"You will take the remaining pair, will you not, Mr. Harley?" she asked while doing up a bundle.

"Yes;" and West Harley tendered his offering.

Some one else came up just then, and they turned awny, leaving Ruth for a moment with her father.

"O! papa!"

"What is it?"

for a moment with her father.
"O! papa!"
"What is it?"
"See what a generous soul Clarence
Hillsdale has. Five hundred dollars

"How much did he give you?"

On last Monday morning a very severe storm of rain and wind passed over Butler, Pa. The lightning was very sharp. Messrs. Borg & Graham's drug store was struck, but the damage was light. The electric fluid passed down along side the chimney, tearing the roof somewhat but doing no other damage.

"West, papa."

"Well, I have decided. Marry West Harley."
"Why, Papa Dorlan."
"You know you love him best. If you don't, you will when you hear my story."
Ruth folded her handstover papa's knee and listened while he related the incident of West's generosity.
When he concluded she said:
