urer, to the great consternation and disgust of the Treasury rooters who had been so largely represented in this vault account; and this fact together with the movements of the Investigating Committee, demonstrated to them thenecessity of breaking up the vault account, with a view to creating a little political capital for the future operations of the Treasury ring. Hence, we find that on the 26th of January, one week before Mackey was to appear as a witness before the Investigating Committee, the account had been reduced to $10,448, and on the 3ist to $8,440, as subsequently stated in his testimony before the committee.

The foregoing is a plain exhibit of how the Treasury 'vault account' was broken up. Every intelligent reader can judge for himself how much credit for this result is due to Mr. Mackey, and how much to the ventillation of the Treasury corruptionists, the expositions of the Investigating Committee, and finally to the defeat of the "great financier" himself
