lood came."
That day I had been over the That day I had been over the mountains to father's, doing some work for him, and I promised to come back the next morning and complete the job. The sky, as usual, had given signs of rain, but we put no confidence in it, thinking that we should be disappointed, as we had been all along; though an old Indian woman, who dwelt in a lodge on the side of the mountains, far up the valley, and who chanced, along, and paused in the doorway for rest, declared that we should have the greatest storm within two days that we had ever known. But we put little confidence in this, for we considered her half crazed, and had she not been, we thought it was little that she could know of what was to come.

SELECT MISCELLANY, scribed as near as I could the symptoms of father's complaint, and he form to fixed some medicine, which he gave powering and then I went out and mounted my horse to return.

The doctor followed me to the docramant of the sky to the northward. He was of the spot from the doorway here, the spot from the doorway here, the spot from the doorway here, the water would have swept it away, standing as it did on the low ground?

It didsweep it away, stranger, and it like the standing in the doorway, with his eyes fixed upon the sky.

Seribed as near as I could the symptoms of father's complaint, and he fixed some medicine, which he gave promed which the force of the water had not yet been able to break, and so had flowed it back, covering the entire valley. How much longer the drift wood would bear the strain it was impossible to door, and we talked for a minute or the sky to the northward. He was of the opinion that we were going to the opinion that we were going to the opinion that we were going to the looks of the sky. I would for many minutes, as I could for many minutes, as it battled with it from the spot where I stood.

Suddenly a shrick, full of mortal terror, rang over the water. My heart stood still in my breast, for I would be willing to take that, if we could only have the rain we so much needed, and then I set out, leaving him standing in the doorway, with his eyes fixed upon the sky.

ground. But it would take me forger to pick my way along, and there would be greater danger of stumbling and getting a fall, than though I had managed to keep the path. But there was no help for it now, as I might as well have looked for a needle in a hay stack, as to have searched for it.

I had got what I thought was a mountain, and the same way over the mountain to father's, thankful for the escape we had from the tempest, which would not be forgotten to our dying day.

On the morrow came the sad news from the Notch, and as Mary and I listened to the story, we shuddered as we thought of our own peril amid the waters.

a heed in this stack, is to have searched for it.

I had got what I thought was about half way down the mountain, when I was startled by a terrible sound that came from the mountains northward, and which drowned the northward, and which drowned the rush of the tempest about me. It was al rush and roar—a mingled crash of earth and rocks, which made even the ground beneath my feet treinble. I knew not then what it could be, but I found afterward that it was the first great slide which came down near the Noch.

Shooting of a Son-in-law for the Dishence of a Daughter-Coolness and Delibaration.

The Richmond Dispatch has the following account of the recent remarkable murder in Chester Va.:

The pretty village of Chester, in Chesterfield County, on the Richmond and Petersburg, Rallroad, just half way between the Cities of Richmond and Petersburg, witnessed a bloody tragedy on Tuesday. A father, to avenge his youthful daughter's honor, killed hisson-in-law and made a second daughter widow. Tho father was Capt. Wm. H.
