Their ghostahips confine themselves, to one family, and the "goings on" that take place in it are both dark and vain. They began from the disappearance of money from the pocket of the head of the family, and gradually worked themselves up to the smashing of crockery, throwing of stones, eggs, and all other small objects, and the tossing of sand and gravel in the faces of the bewildered family. Removal from the haunted house was of no avail, for in the new domicile whither they went, the persecution was continued. Here the clothes of the mother and the eldest daughter were first abstracted and then returned in a cut, and siashed condition that would have driven a mantas maker wild. At other times they would be hid in out of P.S. All fools will learn by experience.

was entered while the family were at charch, and preity thoroughly ransacked, although but little was taken. The depreciations so far as discovered, consisted in the stealing of a valuable ring, a silver mounted revolver and a piece of silver coin, and a vigorous effort to break open a safe, in which Mr. M. keeps his private papers. Access to the house was gained through a back window, and it was certainly an act of uncommon daring for this section of the country. Mr. McKinley has his suspicions as to who the thieves are, but says if the property is returned there will be no investigation into the matter. Milliners and Dealers in Notions.
