THE Republicans of Pennsylvania have good encouragement, by the repoint of the compass, that their principles are popular with the people. All that is necessary to secure a triumphant victory in this State, is unity of action and untiring effort from this until the election in Octoper next. Such a result in Pennsylvania will place the Presidential election, in 1872, beyond all peradventure, in the power of the Republican party. Keep this fact in view, and go solidly to the polls. -Let there

Particulars of the Butchery. [From the Logisville Journal, 13th.] The brother and sister of old Ma John Harper, the owner of Longfel ty, just before daylight Monday morning. Who did the terrible deed, is not known. Mr. John Harinaiden sister were the only white persons who lived on the place. They were born there, and had lived there together until the youngest was over ander stock-farm, and is in the heart of the Blue Grass Regiou. Mr. John Harper was not at home on the fatal night. He had gove to the Lexington races, at which the famous Longfellow and several other of his horses were to run. Mr. Jacob Harper and Miss Betsy Harper were the only ones at home, except about 20 or 30 negroas, who are employed upon the Judging from appearances, the bloody work must have been committed about 6 o'clock in the morning. It was not discovered until af-ter sunrise. Mr. Jueon slept in a room adjoining that of his sister; upon the first floor. About 51 o'clock the housekeeper, a negro woman, went into the room of Miss Betsy but noticed nothing wrong. She re members of hearing the old lady groan once or twice; but as she was very feeble, and had been almost bedridden for a long time, no particular attention was paid to it. A half hour after this Mr. Harper's man-servant went in to wake him. He first called, and then took hold of the old man's shoulder, but still noticed nothing except he was unusually hard to wake. He then left the room. The first discovery was made by the woman servant who, having gone to wake Miss Bet-y, noticed blood upon the bedclothes, and, upon looking closer, found that the old lady's head and face were horribly gashed, and that she was lying in a pool of blood. The bed was literally besineared with gore. The woman ran out scream-Harper was found with his head almost beaten to a jelly, and dead. He was cold and stark and stiff. Miss Belsy was unconscious, but still living. She was not dead at noon yesterday. When John Harper arrived home, the shock almost overcame him. The whole neighborhood had assembied and crowded the rooms and the halls in mute horror. The negroes stood around the doors weeping, and the old house-servant, the nurse of Miss Betsy, knelt at the bedside of her old mistress, crying as if her heart would break. Old John cried like a child. It was a terrible moment, and many who had feared the consequences of his arrival, now believed that he would not survive the shock. No time was to be lost, however, and an investigation was immediately undertaken. The coroner arrived about 11 o'clock and proceeded to hold an inquest. A number of negroes upon the place were examined, and, though the evidence had not all been heard at asst accounts, there was enough to lasten the guilt upon several of the chlored employes. It seems that, on Saturday last, Mr. Jacob Harper went down to Frankfort. out of bank. Upon his return to Midway, he offered to bet large sums on the Longfellow race, and exhibited money, and this came to the knowledge of the assassins. It was not the habit of the family to keep money about the house Money was undoubtedly the object of the murder, but whether the murderers obtained any or not is not known.
