[From the Territorial Enterprise, Sept. 33d.]
The great wildcat and bulldog fight came off at the Opera House last night according to programme, and was witnessed by a full and excited house, composed mostly of men, but a few of the "sterner sex"-when it comes to cat-fighting—were present. THE ARENA.

There was rigged up on the state a large cage, twelve feet wide, ten feet deep, and ten feet high—the front and five feet of either side constructed of small iron bars. Toward the roof of the cage, so as to perfectly light up the interior, were eight gas jets. All being in readiness

It bounded across the den with its stumpy tail erect, and tried to get out through the bars but was driven back by men who stood on either side with swords, with the backs of which they rapped it on the nose. After a few wild plunges about the cage, the dog got a square hold of the beast and very soon killed it. From the time he started in, the dog was not much longer in killing the cat than a black-and-tan would have been in using up a rat.
