

SELECT MISCELLANY.

JASON CREEL.

AN INCIDENT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The mists of the morning still hung heavily on the mountain-top above the village of Redcliff, but the roads which led toward it were crowded with the varied population of the surrounding population from far and near. In Aylesbury the shops were closed; the hammer of the blacksmith lay upon its anvil; not a wagon of any description was to be seen in the street; and even the bar of the tavern was locked, and the key gone with its proprietor toward the city at which he had been sent. The town was without a parallel in the place.

And—save here and there a solitary head looking through a broken pane in some closed up house, with an air of disappointment and despair—nothing was to be seen but the silent little nurseries, here and there, in the general flight it had been left in unskillful hands; or mayhap, here and there a solitary, gauged and ill-natured school-boy was seen, or a boy less sturdy and ill-natured, who, with his mother, was bewept by the privilege of a holiday granted on condition of staying at home—the whole village exhibited a picture of desolation and愁.

But, in proportion as you drew nearer the scenes of desolation, the mist of which the little town of Redcliff was situated, you mingled again in the thick bustle and motion of the world of men and women, boys and horses, and all living, moving and creeping things that inhabit the earth.

The village was crowded to overflowing long before the sun had gained a sufficient altitude to throw its rays upon the deep valley in which it lay. Then the bar of an inn was crowded, and both will get out of the road; but each will charm the other back again, and by-and-by they will agree to go to the place they think the other just like itself.

Old people never marry their opposites; they marry their similars, and gain public favor as rapidly as the

"DOMESTIC."

From the first the "DOMESTIC" has rapidly increased in popularity, until to-day, in the opinion of all experienced Sewing Machine men, it stands forth

"UNRIVALLED!"

The young man does not say "My black eyes require to be wed with blue," and my over-veneration requires to be a little modified with something of dullness and reserve?

Well, then, let us come together, to be wed; then do we know well to teach the others just like itself.

Old people never marry their opposites; they marry their similars, and gain public favor as rapidly as the

"DOMESTIC."

THIS IS IN CONSEQUENCE OF ITS

"SUPERIORITY"
