Facts for the Single .- A French philosopher has lately brought to light some curious social statistics compiled from the records of eleven years in France, Belgium and Holland, says the Hartford Courant, relative to the longevity of married and single men, which furnish tresh proof of the danger of living. It appears that married men be-tween the ages of twenty-five and thirty cours are far more apt to live than unmarried men, the ratio of deaths being, in their favor as four to ten and a half in every thousand persons. Here is a powerful argument for early marriages if the law of self-preservation becomes their advocates, but a little further dethe same age widowers die at the rate of

ON THE DEATH OF MISS MARY BELLE JOHNSTON. Physician's skill, relation's care, And parent's tenderest love. The brother's groan, the sister's tear, All unavailing prove. Dear Mary Belle must away,

Away to worlds unknown, Nor will another moment stay I pity the deploring pair, Who their dear Mary mourn,

She never shall return. Snatched from the charms of fond delight With every female friend, She bids them all a long good-night, And leaves the world behind. How cheerfully may we lay the dust

Of Balle into the tomb. When we have solid ground to trust That she has but gone home. Home to her Father's house above. To join the general song, And share the treasures of his love

With the thrice happy throng. Why should we thus be bathed in tears, Why feel severe annoy, Since she triumphs over all her fears, And shares eternal joy?

Ravished with everlasting charms, And crowned with glory bright, She rests between Emanuel's arms, And feasts on pure delight.

"Oh, trifle not your time away,
Though youth be in its bloom i Prepare now for your dying day,
And mind the world to come."

Orthography.-There are ten vowels in our language, yet nearly all the books tell us there are sixteen. A careful analysis of the vowels will convince any one that there are not sixteen. Most authors, if not all of them, claim that i represents two sounds: a long sound, as heard in ice, and a short sound as in it. This is not true: i in it is an element, but its long sound is a dipthong, -is a union of the grave sound of a, and the long sound of e. The letter a, some claim, represents six sounds; but others claim that it represents only four; and these are heard in ate, arm, all and at. represents two sounds, as in met and meet; o has one, as heard in old; and u ounds; but this is not correct, as we shall see after a little examination. The sound of o in on, which is called its short sound in all the books, is nothing more than a short quantity of a as in all; and the sound of u in full is the sound of o in coze, or u in rule, shortened in quantity. What is usually called the long wand of u as heard in use, mule, immur etc., is the same sound that is heard in few, new, pew, and many other words; and is nothing but a coaleascence of the sound of e as in meet and o as in ooze. is simply o as in ooze, and the latter e as n meet.

Inasmuch as all the vowels have been analyzed, the consonants now demand our attention r' Of these there are ninecen, but I showed clearly in a former paper that c, q and x have no sounds of their own; and, consequently represent no elements that are not represented by other letters. Throwing these out, we have only sixteen consonants as true representatives of elementary sounds; but we shall soon see, however, that these sixteen consonants are required, like the vowels to represent elements exceeding in number their aggregate.— The characters b, d, f, g, h, j, k, l, m, n, p, r, s, t, v and z, each represent an element; but they, singly, do not represent all the subvocals and aspirates of our tongue. There are the elementary sounds epresented by z in azure and s in leisure th in chair, ng in ring, th in thin, th in that and shin show, to be added to those which the consonants represent in other subvocals and aspirates. Of this number f, h, k, p, s, t, ch, sh and thas in thin are aspirates; hence there are thirteen vocals and nine aspirates; and these added to the ten vocals give an aggregate of thirty-two elementary sounds in the English language.

I believe that, in correct and natural pronunciation, no more than 32 elementary sounds are ever heard. These sounds are represented by twenty-three letters; for the reader will bear in mind that c is an equivalent of k and s, q of k, and x of ks. With these elements, one hundred thousand words are uttered by the voice, and spelled on the printed page! And, what is still more wonderful, not one of that vast multitude of words can be spoken without one or more of the ten sounds called vocals; or written without one or more of the five letters called vowels. the one word myrrh may seem a contradiction of my statement, but I this instance y is an equivalent for u a heard in burr.

These facts in relation to the elements of our tongue cannot fail to impress every thoughtful person with profound admiration for the wonderful mechanism of spoken and written language; and not only this, but it should ful all with a deep sense of thankininess to God that he has blessed us with a gift of such great value, from which we derive such an infinite deal of happiness. Speech is, in-deed, the great frontier that marks the boundary between man and the brute creation. Without this gift men would be walking inanities, and life little less than a dumb show.

G. L. E. than a dumb show.
