Whenever a horse directs the points of this ears in a certain direction, as though distrustful or afraid, the reins should be pulled in an oppo-site direction, thus diverting the attention of the assimal from the object caus ing the perturbation. If on the other hand, force or harsh means are used to compel an acquaintance with the object feared, the horse will be doubly excited if not unmarageable. We have found, in cases of shying or haiting at real or fancied objects of disquiet, that stopping the horse, and using soothing language answers a good purpose. If the object is stationary, the horse, after a short time, will most usually advance in the direction of b until apprehended, when he will resume his way in a quiet mood. But if chastiged for shying, he will have two objects of tear instead of one, and becomes more confirmed in the habit of distrustfulness.
