"This is the place, doctor; and for the sake of my name, or we shall be too late."

"With these words, the rough laboring man who summoned me, crossed the door of his workhouse in a back lane, and together we began to mount the crazy stairs."

"It was a horrible spot—filthy, dark and wretched—the abode of poverty and woe; and as we went up to the topmost story of the workhouse, I felt as if I were climbing a ladder of pain."

"I looked at the woman stretched out and nearly dead before me, and as her closed eyes quivered with a painful and desperate expression, when her dull ears caught the sound of my coming, I shook my head, and the face of my conductor felt, in a whisper, 'I nodded affirmatively.'"

"I bought some brandy as I came down, and as I went out, I saw a man in a dark coat, who was looking at me with a suspicious eye."

"I reached out my hand for it, and he turned away with a look of indignation. 'I am not your debtor,' he said, and he walked off with a heavy step."

The Temple of Diana.

Most people have heard of those famous deep-sea divers who were taking refuge from the persecutions of Diocletian at the close of the third century, fell asleep there, and woke up six centuries afterward to find a new world and a Christian empire.

Securely less romantic have been the fortunes of the famous temple of Diana, which, on the seventh wreckers of the ancient world, destroyed by an earthquake and plundered by the Goths in the third century, was discovered by the remains of its ruins were allowed to fill up slightly under the slow but sure action of the elements.

The very slight of the world famous temple was obliterated till British enterprise, piercing through 22 feet of alluvial deposit, came suddenly in contact with the temple, still strewn with broken columns, capitals, and fragments of sculpture. This discovery is one of the most important in the history of the temple.

As soon as his strength returned, he ascended an eminence, but could see no sign of the wreck or of the temple. Catching at some article that was floating by, he clung to it almost unconsciously, not relaxing his hold even when his senses were falling him. Fortunately, he was floated to land, and when he reached, found himself lying on the beach.

"What cheer, my hearty?" "Turning around, he gladly recognized the face of his old acquaintance, and inquired what had become of the rest."

"Why, I don't know, but I suppose they are safe by this time; but I have not seen them since."

"Were you not with them in the boats?" "No, I stayed on board to the last."

"And so old I thought I was not aware of your being on board. I hope you succeeded as well as I did in saving your money."

"I had nothing to save but my Jack-knife and a plug of tobacco—both safe enough in my trousers pocket."

"The old man did not think of saving anything at once."

"No, I could not think of leaving the ship so long as the planks held together, or my life in any danger."

"I was not with them in the boats?" "No, I stayed on board to the last."
