So Lionel took his little sister back into the cottage, and brought wood and built a warm fire in the fireplace; and tile light danced and flickered about the room, playing all sorts of pranks with the chairs and tables and the ornaments on the mantleplece; loy and for a long time they and Rose and Lionel sat looking into the fire, her little hand resting in the lovellest clouds in the heavens had collected together to see it, and each reflected and multiplied the splendor. The sea was calm, and painted the wondrous picture on its bosom so marvelously well that it was hard to decide whether the reality or the copy were the better. The souls of the children were filled with the ornaments on the mantleplece; loy and love, and for a long time they had been sitting beside each other, very silent, but hand in band as every

"See, Rose, in that red-hot coal is a perfect picture of the sea, and sun resting on it; and in the sun can you not see our mother's face smiling on us?"

"Yes! Yes!" cried Rose, clapping her little hands for joy; and now we need never feel the cold and darkness out of doors, for we can always have our mother's sunshine in the cottage!" So that night they both slept soundly, and Rose dreamed that the warm weather and soft winds had come back; all the more deligitful for having been lost. But delightful for having been lost. But ure in the chair was nothing but the delightful for having been lost. But ure in the chair was nothing but the Lionel thought he was standing by his mother's chair, on which hung the enchanted mantle and wondering if the time had not yet come when he might put it on. DETERMINED TO WIN. A BEAUTIFUL DOMESTIC STORY

"Of all the things, this is the worst!

If I ever in all my life expected to hear such news! Why, our George has gone and got married! Do you hear?"

Good Mrs. Clements pushed her steelbowed spectacles off her bright eyes, and dropped her letter in her lap, as she turned round to her husband, the stout, clever old farmer who was contentedly stroking the old white cat.

a heap of you—me and the deacon."

Mary's voice trembled at the kindnessof the old lady's tone; but she sewed rapidly on.

"It is so uncommon lonesome since the boy left the farm; but it's worse since he got married. It seems like deserting us altogether." "Descon d'ye hear?" This time, when she asked the ques-tion, there was a touch of sharpness ith her voice.

"Yes; what if he is married? I'm sure it's natural enough. It kind o' runs in the family, 'pears to me."

But Mrs. Clements would take no notice of the little pleasantry.

"Well, if you like it, I can tell you I don't, He needn't think he's complete the pleasant with his fine sity. I want leads to the little pleasant would take no notice of the little pleasantry.

Was it any wonder that George had fallen in love with her?

She sat in the bright little parlor, close beside the lace-curtained window, watching for the loved husband's return; and then, when she heard the click of the latch-key in the hall, flew for the welcome kiss.

"Havn't you got the letter this out of the window looked a moment."
