There were a number of Republicans, who, though honestly opposed to a portion of the State and County ticket, were at the same time warm friends of Gen. Grant; these men were induced to vote the straight ticket, by being made to believe, that the successor defeat of Gen. Grant, depended on the result of the October election in Pennsylvania; and in this way Grant was used to help drag the heavy load through. These disaffected ones were instructed that a vote for Hartranft in October, was as good as two for Grant in November. So general was the belief amongst the better por tion of the Radical party, that carrying such a load, (as part of the ticket was feat of the whole ticket, that an effort was made to have the obnoxious one withdrawn; but the slate makers would not permit it, they were the chosen ones, set up, by the Cameron ring; and they should be sacrificed to effect it. They boasted that they could elect them, and that they could have any majority in Philadelphia that would be necessary to to do so, and by the registy of 52,000 more voters this year than in 1871, were prepared to make their boast good.
