THE BEAVER ARGUS.

Vol. 54—No. 47. Beaver, Pa., Wednesday, December 4, 1872. Established 1818

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Advertisements are inserted at the rate of $1.00 per square for first insertion, and for each subsequent insertion 50 cents. A liberal discount made on yearly advertisements.

A space equal to ten lines of this type measures a square.

Business Notices set under a head by themselves immediately after the local news, will be charged ten cents a line for each insertion.

Advertisements should be handed in before Monday noon to insure insertion in that week's paper.

THE BEAVER ARGUS

Is published every Wednesday in the old Argus building on Third Street, Beaver, Pa., at $2 per year in advance.

Communications on subjects of local or general interest are respectfully solicited. To insure attention favors of this kind must invariably be accompanied by the name of the author.

Letters and communications should be addressed to J. WEYAND, Beaver

Business Directory.

Holloway's Pills

AND

Holloway's Ointment.

THIS grand principle that operates in these wonderful medicines, is the power that they possess in purifying the turgid blood, and expelling corrupt humors from the system.

Holloway's Pills consist of a careful and peculiar admixture of the finest Vegetable Extracts, Herbs and Medicinal Gums. Possessing not a grain of mineral in their combination, they never expose those who use them to any danger, at any time or season. No mother need hesitate to prescribe them to her children, and the most delicate constitutions can use them with as great a benefit as the most vigorous and powerful frame.

HOLLOWAY & CO., Sole Proprietors, 78 Maiden Lane, New York.

Holloway's Pills and Ointment are sold at 25 cents, 62½ cts. and $1 per box or pot. A great saving is made by buying the large sizes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Written for the Beaver Argus.

TWO SELECT MARRIAGES.

BY JESSIE.

"Oh dear! May, what shall I do? Adolphus LeRay is worrying the life out of me. Indeed I fully expect a proposal to-night. How he can expect for a moment that any one could deign to take notice of him, with his dandified airs, is more than I can see. He perfectly disgusts me with his 'ways' and perfectly chawming's and all such stuff. He is a regular fop sister."

"So you don't like him?" said May.

"Like him? No indeed, I fairly hate him. Do you like him?"

"I don't know, that is, I never saw him but once, and then he disgusted me so, that I'll never ventured near him since."

Violet Woodburn was the only daughter of fond and indulgent parents. May Everton, was her dearest friend; and had been ever since she could remember.

"May," said Violet, "you were always good at getting out of scrapes when we were in school, now, can't you think of some way for me to get rid of him?"

"Is he coming to-night?"

"Yes," said Violet.

"All right, come down to the arbor, and I will tell you of a plan that just came into my head. I think it will answer very well."

We will not listen to their conversation, suffice it to say that at five o'clock that evening, Violet was dressed and waiting for Mr. LeRay. She had not long to wait, for very soon her maid brought up a card with, "Adolphus LeRay" printed in full. Violet ran down stairs and with difficulty repressing a smile, opened the door and entered the parlor.

"Good evening, Mr. LeRay"

"Good evening; ah—Miss Woodburn."

After a few moments silence; "this is pleasant weather we are having," said Violet.

"Oh, Yes! It is splendid, delightful; we have had chawming weather, Miss Woodburn, (drawing his chair closer to the one in which Violet was seated.) What do you think I came here for to-day?"

"I am sure I have not the least idea," said she demurely.

"Well, I came on very important business; at least it is important to me."

"Indeed? is it with father? If so you should have gone to the store."

"Oh, no, it is not with your father that I have business, but with yourself."

"With me?" Said she in well feigned astonishment, "why what can you possibly want with me?"

"Oh, Miss Violet, you surely know why I came here to-night."

"Why Mr. LeRay, how can I know what business you have with me, when you have not told me what it is."

"Oh, Violet, my darling, you must surely know that I have long loved you. You must love me now sweetest for if you do not, I am afraid I should die. Will you be mine?"

"Oh Adolphus," said she blushing prettily.

"Answer me my idol, 'yes' or 'no,' My whole future depends on that little word, if you say yes, I shall be happy for life, if you say no, I will be miserable."

"Yes, Adolphus, if you want me to say it so badly," dropping her head upon his shoulder. "But have you asked father," added she looking up.

"No, my queen, but I will stay to dinner and ask him then."

"But, Adolphus, he is very busy at the store and sent up word that he would not be home to dinner. You could go down there though, and ask him, and then return and tell me the result of the interview."

"Very well, my own Violet, but I dislike to leave you for a short time even. The moments are days away from you. My tender heart grieves to part with you," said he, clasping her in his arms and imprinting a kiss upon her lips.

She accompanied him to the door, and as soon as he was at the bottom of the steps, ran quickly into the parlor and moved back one of the window curtains, disclosing May seated therein.

"Well, May," said Violet, "was that part of the programme acted to suit you."

"You could not have done it better," was May's answer. "Now Vi, if you let this thing drop you will never hear the last of it."

"I don't intend to let it drop," said Violet. "Father would be surprised at that note, wouldn't he?"

"Yes indeed, he will think you are at some new piece of mischief."

"Well, he will not be very far from right, we are at a pretty good piece of mischief. There is one thing May, that I am afraid of."

"What is that?"

"I am afraid father will not consent to let me marry Fred Lorraine."

"Why, has he proposed yet?"

"Yes, this afternoon, while you were over home, you know, after we came out of the arbor, I said yes, and referred him to papa. I told him all about our plans for LeRay and you just ought to have heard him laugh."

Just then there was a rap at the door. Violet ran to the window.

"Oh May, get behind the curtain quick. It is LeRay already."

May was already hid, and Violet had barely time to sit down beside another window, pick up a book, and pretend to be reading, when he was shown into the room by the servant.

"Oh, my peerless queen, my own Violet! I cannot give you up!"

"My own Adolphus! What is the matter?" cried Violet, springing to his side.

"Oh darling, your father has forbidden me ever to speak to you of love. He says you are too young; and that, if you were older, he could find somebody that was more worthy of you than I am."

Violet fainted now.

"Oh my, what shall I do? I never was in such a fix in my life. Better ring for a servant, I guess."

Just then, Violet found it convenient to open her eyes.

"My darling has revived," murmured he. "I was going to ring for a servant."

"Oh Adolphus! I cannot live without you. I would go any place with you."

"Then let us fly," said he. "Your papa would, surely forgive us, when he sees how great is our love, how exceedingly great is our devotion."

"I am sure he would," said Violet.

"Then remember, darling, at the end of the avenue, on next Thursday evening, I will await you with a carriage at eight o'clock."

"Yes, dearest Adolphus, I will be there, but we must part now, for papa may come home at any time, and he would be very angry if you were here."

"Well, good-by then, my own star, my soul, my life; I must go, but give me one farewell kiss."

Violet complied; again accompanied him to the door, and then rejoined May in the parlor.

"Getting along splendidly!" was her comment. "It was rather close behind the curtains; I am glad it is over."

"So am I," said Violet. "I had the worst part of it though."

"But, Vi., may be he does love you?" said May.

"Love me? Yes, I guess so. Didn't cousin Ralph hear him telling a crowd of puppies, like himself, about the splendid heiress he was going to catch. 'I like her well enough,' said he, 'but I love her money.' By the way, May dear, it seems to me you are a little bit in love yourself, are n't you?"

"With whom?" said May, quietly.

"With a certain cousin of mine; Ralph, by name."

"Well," said May, "I may as well tell you; we are engaged, and have been ever since last Sunday evening.

"Why May Everton! Why didn't you tell me before?"

"I didn't like to," said May.

"There is another ring at the door bell," said Violet, going to the window. "It is Fred Loraine, May. Are you going behind the curtains again?"

"No, thank you, I don't believe I will this time. Hearing one 'lover's conversation' is enough for one day."

A moment later, Mr. Fred Loraine entered.

"Good evening, ladies," said he.

"Good evening, Mr. Loraine," was responded.

After a few remarks on the weather, and other uninteresting topics, May arose, and asking the other two to excuse her, left the room and went upstairs to have a chat with Mrs. Woodburn. After she had left the room, Violet went over to Fred, and laying her hand on his shoulder, said:

"Well, Fred, what did papa say?"

"He said no, you were too young to think of marriage at all; and, that he would forbid me to enter the house if ever I spoke to you of love; but, my darling, I will not give you up; I have a plan already. You promised to elope with LeRay, next Thursday. Now, as you are not going to fulfil that engagement, I want you to make one with me. You say your father is going to Philadelphia for goods next Thursday morning?"

"Yes," said Violet.

"Well, then next Thursday evening you will be married to me in your own house. Your mother is willing, is she not?"

"Yes, Fred."

"Well, don't you see your way clear now? Your father will relent and forgive us, and everything turn out as nicely as can be. Won't you, darling?"

"Yes, Fred, if you wan't me to; and May will help us. By the way, Fred, did Ralph tell you of their engagement?"

"No; are they?"

"Yes; May told me this afternoon. But, as I told Adolphus, you must go now, for if father should come home and find you here he would be very angry. Good-by, Fred."

"Good-by, darling. But wait, one word before we part. I came across the sweetest nook you ever saw, over in the grove, right beside the old rock we used to play on. If you will come to the edge of the grove I will meet you there, and we will go to the place together."

"When?" said Violet.

"To-morrow evening at five o'clock."

"Very well, I will be there. Now good-bye till to-morrow."

"Good-bye."

After Fred had turned the corner, Violet ran up stairs.

"Well," said May, as she came in, "what comes next on the programme?"

"Another elopement," said Violet. "Well, I declare, Vi. what will you do next?"

"Are you going to run off with Fred?"

"Not exactly, we are going to get married next Thursday in this house; that leaves me two days to get ready in."

"I will come over to-morrow morning, and stay all day, and help you," said May, "but I must go home now."

"Oh, pshaw! stay for supper."

"I can't, somebody might call this evening, and I always like to be at home when any one calls."

"Oh, yes," said Violet laughingly, "I had forgotten poor Ralph altogether, you had better hurry, he might be there before you get home."

"I am going as soon as I can get my thin s on," was May's reply, and she was soon walking down the avenue toward her home.

Violet lay awake a long time that night thinking, and wondering how it would turn out. The next morning May came over, and they were soon hard at work sewing, and fixing everthing up nicely. That evening Violet took her hat and said she was going to take a walk, started for the grove, where she was met by Fred.

"Am I on time," said she.

"Yes, dearest, but I came a little before time, so you would not get here before I did, and have to wait on me."

They talked over their plans, as all lovers will, and after they had talked about an hour, bade each other good-bye and went home. As Violet came into the sitting room, her father said:

"Why, Violet, where have you been, I've been waiting for you to to play chess with me for ever so long. I think you must take pretty long walks."

"I walked slowly," said Violet.

"Well, come now and play a few games."

"Yes, father,"

And they played on for awhile, but Mr. Woodburn soon tired of it, because—as he said—Violet would not let any one beat but herself.

"Oh, pshaw," said he, "you are the greatest cheat around, you won't let me get a single game."

"Oh, well," said Violet, "I will sing and play for you, that will do won't it?"

"Yes daughter."

She played "Rory O'Moore," "Bonny Doon" and some of the old Scotch airs, her father liked so well. After she had played awhile she turned around to ask her
