Cecil was always very lenient toward his erring brother; but at last, hearing from every source of his scrapes, he was compelled, by a sense of duty, to resolve to refuse his applications for aid. And it was not long before he had to test his resolutions, for Gilbert, after "all night" of it in the gambling saloon, came to him

A first one in his eyes begged that he would quit his wild habits. But all was of no avail; and he was compelled, much against his brotherly feelings, to refuse him the aid he sought. At this Gilbert flaw into a francy of rage and the cell at the lawyers, and so the matter would end. It was a noticeable fact that these accidents nearly always happened in Mark's cases.
